RAY WEBSTER, REPORTER FOR THE POST DISPATCH IN THE FEDERAL BUILDING, SAINT LOUIS, WHO HAS ALWAYS BEEN VERY FRIENDLY TO THE SAINT LOUIS OFFICE, CALLED UPON ME TODAY WITH A MEMORANDUM SUBMITTED BY JOSEPH PULITZER, PUBLISHER, ST. LOUIS POST DISPATCH, TO MR. REESE, THE MANAGING EDITOR OF THE POST DISPATCH, WHO IN TURN SUBMITTED IT TO

MR. CROWLEY, CITY EDITOR, WHO IN TURN REFERRED IT TO RAY WEBSTER, WHO THEREAFTER BROUGHT IT TO THIS OFFICE. IS IS QUOTED AS FOLLOWS - QUOTE LINCOLN HOCKADAY SUGGESTS, AND I THINK THE SUGGESTION HAS REAL MERIT, THAT IN ORDER TO CLEAR UP WHATEVER CONFUSION THE STAR MAY HAVE CAUSED BY ITS QUESTIONING THE INTEGRITY OF OUR JOURNALISTIC POSITION IN PUBLISHING THE JAP NEGRO STORY, WE ASK THE FBI TO GIVE US A VERY BRIEF STATEMENT ALONG THIS LINE -

"I AM HAPPY TO SAY FOR THE INFORMATION OF THE PUBLIC THAT THE FBI IS UNDER OBLIGATIONS TO THE EDITORIAL STAFF OF THE ST. LOUIS POST DISPATCH FOR THE VERY GREAT ASSISTANCE WHICH THIS STAFF

CONTRIBUTED TO OUR INVESTIGATION OF FIFTH COLUMN ACTIVITIES OF

OF THE JAP LEADER OF THE CONSPIRACY, AND OTHER PIECES OF EVIDENCE WHICH AT THIS TIME SHOULD NOT BE AND WILL NOT BE DISCLOSED. WE CONSIDER THAT, BY ITS EXPOSURE OF THE FACTS IN ITS PUBLICATIONS OF FEBRUARY FIFTH AND SIXTH, THE POST DISPATCH RENDERED THE COUNTRY A VERY REAL PUBLIC SERVICE."

IF THEY WONT SAY ALL OF THIS, PERHAPS THEY WILL SAY SOME OF IT.

IT WOULD BE BEST TO HAVE THE STATEMENT COME FROM HOOVER PERSONALLY. IF HE CANT SAY IT, PH POSSIBLY ATTORNEY GENERAL BIDDLE WILL. IF NONE OF THEM WILL SAY IT AND IF, AS I PRESUME, THEY BROADCAST OUR PHOTOGRAPH IN POST OFFICES, ETC., AS A POLICE CIRCULAR, COULD WE NOT VERY PROPERLY REPRODUCE THIS CIRCULAR AND LET THE FACTS SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES. INDEED, IF WE GET THE STATEMENT AND THERE IS SUCH A CIRCULAR IT WOL WOULD BE FINE TO PRINT BOTH. UNQUOTE. MR. KRAMER OF THE BUREAU DISCUSSED THIS SITUATION WITH ME BY TELEPHONE A FEW DAYS AGO. ALL THREE PAPERS HAD PROMISED NOT TO PRINT INFORMATION THEY HAD GATHERED BY INVESTIGATION REGARDING THE ACTIVITIES OF THE ~~PACIFIC~~ PACIFIC MOVEMENT OF THE EASTERN WORLD. HOWEVER, WHEN THE POST DISPATCH LEARNED THAT THE STAR TIMES HAD ALSO OBTAINED THE INFORMATION THEY DECIDED AGAINST WITHHOLDING PUBLICATION, AND CALLED ME AND ADVISED ME OF THIS FACT. THERE

HAS BEEN NO INDICATION THUS FAR THAT THE PUBLICITY IN THIS CASE HAS IN ANY WAY INJURED THE INVESTIGATION. AS A MATTER OF FACT, THE STAR TIMES AND THE POST DISPATCH HAVE CONTRIBUTED WHATEVER INFORMATION THEY RECEIVED BY THEIR INVESTIGATION, TO THIS OFFICE. THE POST DISPATCH WAS THE FIRST TO PRODUCE THE PHOTOGRAPH OF THE PROSPECTIVE SUBJECTS NAMELY DR. ASHIMA TAKIS AND M. LIANG.

NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS RELATING TO THE CONTROVERSY BETWEEN THE STAR TIMES AND THE POST DISPATCH HAVE BEEN SUBMITTED TO THE BUREAU.

I HAVE ADVISED RAY WEBSTER NO ACTION COULD BE TAKEN BY ME IN CONNECTION WITH THE ABOVE MATTER, AND HE STATED HE HAD ANTICIPATED THIS ACTION ON MY PART, AND HAD TOLD HIS EMPLOYERS THAT THIS WOULD PROBABLY BE MY REPLY, AND THAT I WOULD ADVISE HIM THAT IT WAS NECESSARY TO SUBMIT SUCH A REQUEST TO THE BUREAU. AFTER THE BUREAU HAS HAD AN OPPORTUNITY TO REVIEW THE CLIPPINGS SUBMITTED, IT IS RESPECTFULLY SUGGESTED THAT THIS OFFICE BE ADVISED RELATING TO THE ABOVE REQUEST.

Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:

Alvin Goldstein, the New York City representative of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, with whom I am slightly acquainted, telephoned and advised me that Mr. Joseph Pulitzer, the publisher of the Post-Dispatch, had requested that he prepare a series of stories, four or five, which would deal with the FBI success in espionage cases. Mr. Goldstein wanted to know if any material might be available on this subject and whom he should contact in Washington in order to get it since he would want material on a national basis. I told him that I would suggest that he speak with Mr. L. B. Nichols of the Bureau which he indicated he would do.

Very truly yours,

THE FBI GIVES DIES THE LIE.

The FBI has made an investigation of nine employees of the Board of Economic Warfare who were accused three weeks ago of "subversive connections" by Representative Dies. All nine, including one man, C. Hartley Grattan, who resigned because of the Texan's extremely serious charge, have been cleared.

This incident offers a crystal-clear example of the harm Representative Dies does by his wild and irresponsible charges. First, his accusation was echoed all over Europe and South America by Axis radio to prove that Washington is a nest of crackpots and dangerous radicals. Incalculable harm to American prestige may have resulted.

Second, an important Government agency has been deprived of a valuable employee. Third, Americans who have not yet caught on to Dies' unscrupulous efforts to get personal publicity through fantastic accusations may have had their confidence in our Government seriously shaken.

This follows the usual pattern of Dies "exposes"—a wild and ridiculous accusation of some innocent person which makes headlines, followed by later repudiation, which often escapes public notice.

Dies now has his hand out for more money from Congress to continue his witch-hunting career. He should be cut off without a cent.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. TOLSON

Re: Alvin H. Goldstein
St. Louis Post Dispatch

Mr. Alvin Goldstein, Post Dispatch Bureau, Room 2401, 521 Fifth Avenue, New York City, telephone Mohawk 4-5237, residence 545 West End Avenue, telephone Trafalgar 7-8525, called at the Bureau pursuant with previous arrangements to secure material for a series of articles. For record purposes prior to Goldstein's arrival I had mentioned the project to Mr. Gilfond who approved the idea.

General background material was furnished to Goldstein on the following cases:

1. Ducase, with particular emphasis on Edward Heine and Lilly Stein.
2. Case involving George Bodenschatz.
3. Case involving Carl Borchardt and the Ludwig case.
4. William Etzel and material pertaining to sabotage.

It is Goldstein's idea to write these up along the line of mystery stories, showing first facts of the individuals involved and then developing the resources of the FBI in bringing them to justice.

For record purposes Goldstein is on assignment on the specific instructions of Pulitzer, the publisher of the St. Louis Post Dispatch.

I found Goldstein an energetic individual who appeared to be very conscientious and an ardent admirer of the Bureau. I furnished him with various materials and information pertaining to our work will be forwarded to him in New York City. His article will be cleared in the Bureau prior to publication.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. NICHOLS

Re: Alvin H. Goldstein,
Newark Representative of
St. Louis Post Dispatch,
St. Louis, Missouri

PRIOR CONTACTS WITH GOLDSTEIN:

In June, 1938, Alvin H. Goldstein contacted Mr. E. A. Tamm and stated that the St. Louis Post Dispatch wished to publish a two-page article concerning the accomplishments of the FBI during the Director's administration. The article he published covered two complete pages of the St. Louis Post Dispatch of Sunday, June 19, 1938. The front page carried a twelve by six inches picture of the Director shooting a Thompson sub-machine gun. The entire lower half of the second page was devoted to pictures of the Director taken at different times during his life. The article is well-written.

In July, 1938, he spoke with Mr. Foxworth at New York City in connection with the Mattson Kidnapper and wanted information concerning how the drawing of the kidnapper had been prepared and how the artist had secured his information. There is no indication he was ever given this information.

In May, 1940, he contacted the New York Field Division requesting a number of pictures concerning the FBI. No cooperation was given him due to the attitude of his newspaper as expressed in an editorial in the March 1, 1940, issue of the Post Dispatch.

Special Agent in Charge E. E. Conroy of the Newark Field Division advises that Goldstein is the Newark representative of the St. Louis Post Dispatch. Mr. Conroy remembers Mr. Goldstein during the time Mr. Conroy served in Missouri several years ago. Mr. Conroy states that Mr. Goldstein has been very friendly with the Bureau although there was some difficulty with him during the Davis kidnapping case. This was attributed to his editor and a tip-off by Colonel Casteel, then Superintendent of the Missouri State Police. However, Mr. Conroy states our relationship with him since then has been very satisfactory. Conroy speaks highly of him.

RELATIONS WITH ST. LOUIS POST DISPATCH:

Our relations with this newspaper date back to August, 1933, and were on a very friendly basis. Several editorials were printed in the newspaper commending the work of the FBI. In 1937 a special tour was afforded Ralph Pulitzer, the owner of the Post Dispatch, and at that time he indicated a marked interest in the Director and the Bureau.

However, the March 1, 1940, issue of the Post Dispatch carried an editorial entitled "J. Edgar Hoover's Fishy Activities." This article was written in conjunction with Senator Norris' attack on the Bureau. It pictures the Director in a very unfavorable light and intimates that he is using the FBI to push himself into the public light. It concludes by saying that Congress should turn an investigative light on the FBI and its publicity mad chief. The result was that on April 3, 1940, all individuals connected with this newspaper were taken off our mailing list by the Director's authority.

On June 26, 1941, G-2 reported that Julius Klyman who is on the editorial staff, is a member of the Communist Party, as is Elwood Douglas, who is a reporter and a member of the editorial staff.

On July 1, 1941, they published an editorial concerning the Ducase which was favorable to the Bureau. No acknowledgement was made. Daniel R. Fitzpatrick has drawn several cartoons which are very favorable to the Bureau. He presented the originals to the Director.

On December 1, 1941, they asked the Attorney General why the pictures relating to the Ducase were released only to Life Magazine. Mr. Gilfond was advised by Mr. Nichols that this was the first information the Bureau had that the Post Dispatch was interested in such pictures and that Life Magazine was the only one who had asked for such pictures.

In January, 1942, they published an editorial regarding the alien roundup which was favorable. No acknowledgement was made.

Memorandum for Mr. Nichols

May 1, 1942

In February, 1942, B. H. Reese, Managing Editor called at the St. Louis Field Division and offered his personal assistance and the assistance of the newspaper to the Bureau. It will be noted that the newspaper recently was of assistance in killing the alleged "Missouri Gestapo," a vigilante group. Editorially its position was favorable to the Bureau.

In March, 1942, the newspaper sought a statement from the Director to the effect that the FBI is under obligation to the editorial staff of the St. Louis Post Dispatch for the assistance which this staff contributed to the Bureau's investigation of the fifth column Japanese in St. Louis, and that the Post Dispatch by its exposures has rendered the country a valuable public service. Special Agent in Charge Norris advised that the Post Dispatch had contributed the result of their investigations to the Bureau and had produced a photograph of two Japanese subjects. This appears to be an argument between the Post Dispatch and the Star Times of St. Louis, and the Post broke its faith with the Bureau and released publicity on the case to prevent being scooped by the Star Times. Apparently the publicity did not harm the case. The statement was denied to the Post Dispatch.

For record purposes, there are attached hereto copies of the articles which were approved by Messrs. Ladd, Tamm, and the writer for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. The four articles approved are as follows:

1. George Carl Bodenschatz
2. All-over story on the Ducase.
3. Story on Edmund C. Heine
Kurt Fredrick
4. Story on the Ludwig Case

The story on the Etzel Sabotage Case was disapproved and I told Goldstein over the phone we could not approve it. He understands the reasons and was not particularly proud of the story himself. I returned the original of that manuscript to him together with a memorandum on [redacted] of the Ducase.

Goldstein was also furnished with some photographs to illustrate the stories which, generally speaking, are very good.

Dear Lou:

Here is the second spasm, the Bodenschatz story. I hope it fulfills your expectations, but right now you have me scared to death because I haven't heard from you on the Ludwig-Robert effort.

As to art, you know what I want--everything I can get. Particularly some pictures mentioned in the memo showing Mrs. B. with the Nazi notables, ~~2~~ photos (two) showing similiary between Gaertner's typing and the corrections on Mrs. B's manuscripts; photos of Mrs. B., Mr. B. and if possible Gaertner.

Well, it doesn't hurt to ask, does it? Hope you feel better soon. Take it easy but don't let any investigations ~~stand~~ stand in the way of important Post-Dispatch business.

Yours,

Al Goldstein

by Alvin K. Garfield

Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

Washington, May 26.—Before the United States became directly involved in the war, a German newspaperman addressed a women's club meeting at Louisville on the subject of his experiences and impressions in Germany. To his astonishment, he received shortly thereafter, a letter from the Wirtschaftspolitische Gesellschaft, Berlin, informing certain "immoralities" in his speech found objectionable by Nazis. He promptly informed the Federal Bureau of Investigation of his suspicion that a foreign agent was at large in Louisville.

Thus began an inquiry to determine the identity of a Nazi "tipster" whose activities, to the unpractised eye, might appear innocuous. But after ~~FBI~~ ^{the} ~~uncovered~~ with painstaking thoroughness the amazing evidence, one of the most active agents ~~of a foreign power in the United States was unmasked~~; her wealthy, German-born husband ~~disclosed~~ ^{was} as her aide, and dozens of clues resulting ^{subsequently} in the identification of other enemies within the gates had been obtained. It's all in the records at Washington.

Shortly after investigation began of ^{the} list of persons in the Louisville area subject to suspicion, there was a remarkable development at Cincinnati. It was whispered into ~~FBI~~ ^{FBI} ears that a man named "Arnold," ~~in~~ ⁱⁿ Cincinnati apartment ~~had displayed so strong a suspicion to~~ ^{attachment} to the Nazi cause that acquaintances suspected him as a ~~German spy~~ ^{German spy}. The Federal agents quickly determined that "Arnold" recently had returned ^(FROM GERMANY) to the United States, bringing with him on the ship a maroon colored Lincoln Kephyr.

Inspecting the freight records of the vessel for that trip, the FBI learned that 20 automobiles of the same description were unloaded at the New York pier. With minute care, each car was traced from factory to salesroom to purchaser until it was established beyond doubt that the machine in "Arnold's" possession was owned by George Earl Bodenschatz, who had been reported to the FBI as early as 19 president and owner of the Superior Welding Co., Louisville, Kentucky.

Photographs of Bodenschatz were positively identified at Cincinnati as those of the was whale or minnow the problem for FBI fishermen now was to determine if he was as Arnold's. The problem for FBI fishermen now was to determine if he Investigation of their own records was preliminary to an exhaustive scrutiny of Bodenschatz's activities, aroused in the Federal agents an eagerness to learn much more. He had emigrated from Germany in 1912 and became an American citizen in 1921. He and his brother, Karl, had received military instruction in Germany and Karl, last war, had served on the staff under Reichsmarshal Hermann Goering, and now was a Major General functioning as liaison officer between Goering and Hitler.

Records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation also contained the information that he had married Clara Feeney Hulse in 1918, and together they had visited Germany in 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, "I feel that I can render Germany a great service in my country by way of the right sort of propaganda because this evening when I have engagements for lectures each week before the Women's Clubs and other public organizations, I am doing this work out of love for the land that gave my husband Adolf his power and the firm conviction the principles of the present Government under your guidance will make a better and finer Germany for Germans and in doing this it makes a better and finer Germany for the world."

The tie-up between this attitude and her actions in the United States was found by the Federal agents in a check of her various speaking engagements when maudlin phrases such as the following were overheard by her audience:

"When I arrived at this simple home of Hitler's (Berchtesgaden) at the beginning I was greeted by his aide. At once Hitler came from his room. He saluted me and shook hands. It has been my very rare and great privilege to meet personally several the leaders and heads of various countries, but I must say that Hitler received me in a way which I have never been received before by a head of a government."

The problem confronting FBI investigators then was to determine ^{any} citizen is entitled or whether, instead of being ~~such~~ small fry, she was a ~~kind~~ d, skillful, ~~agent~~ trusted agent of the German Government working under direction of another nation in violation of existing laws. The long arm of the Federal Bureau of Investigation stretched from Louisville to San Francisco where an enemy alien, formerly connected with the German Consulate, was taken into custody.

At his quarters a search disclosed a letter from Margarete Goerner, ~~German Consul~~ ^{German Consul} ~~the German Consul~~ ^{the German Consul} informing him that in a few days he would receive copies of a small pamphlet, prepared by Mrs. George Bodenschatz "with my collaboration" for distribution. There was also ~~a letter~~ ^{copy of the} from the alien to Mrs. Bodenschatz acknowledging receipt of the pamphlet.

It was recalled that the Louisville journalist had received his critical letter ~~from~~ on the stationery of the Wirtschaftspolitische Gesellschaft, known throughout the world as WPG, a division of the Nazi Ministry of Propaganda and Enlightenment under Dr. Goebbels, with "educational work in foreign countries" its official objective. It published propaganda ~~newspapers~~ in English and other languages for release in nations coveted by Nazis. Margarete Gaebtner was Director of the WPG.

It was hardly necessary for FBI agents to leave their office to establish that Margarete Gaertner had been a guest of the Hodemacherts in 1935 and in 1937 at their sumptuous home in Louisville. During these intervals she was engaged as an employee of the German Embassy at Washington. Later when the ~~German~~ ~~Embassy~~ was brought into the Nazi regime by the Ministry of Economics and the social section of the Gestapo, she became the director principally because of her knowledge of persons and places in America.

By this time the FBI knew it was on the trail of one of the most influential and successful propaganda agents in the United States and began the long process of establishing the extent of her activities. They found she had instilled throughout the nation to clubs, church, civic and school groups denigrating the British empire under Hitler and defending policies of the Nazi party, being assisted in arranging engagements by various German consuls.

She had published at Louisville nearly 20,000 pamphlets, including "The Star Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow," "Germanic America," "Czechoslovakia," and "New Germany Rehabilitation," also a book, "The German Railroads Information Service," and had been in contact with Viola, in person, using lines through an intermediary, and was so valuable that it also was considered.

State of the Union

But to John Edgar Hoover, directing the investigation of the FBI, the pattern was not complete. His agents interviewed a ~~German~~ minister who had toured Germany. ^(In Berlin) He had visited the "information" office ~~in Berlin~~ and asked who was qualified to speak ~~for~~ ^{for} Germany in the United States. Ultimately he was introduced to a Mrs. Gaertner who told him that the person to see was ~~the~~ Mrs. Bodenschatz of Louisville, Kentucky. Later the minister received letters asking him to arrange speaking engagements for the Louisville lady, both from her and from Mrs. Gaertner. These letters, and others of the kind, were later to become ~~the~~ evidence of incalculable value.

From others who had ~~visited~~ ^{visited} Germany ^{and} from loyal naturalized German citizens, the FBI continued to gather irrefutable evidence that Mrs. Bodenschatz was working under the direction of a foreign power; that her visits to Germany were prepaid by the Nazi Government and—more important—that the cost of printing ~~and~~ her pamphlets was borne by Germany when that nation elected to distribute them. In the natural order of things, it was determined, the printing cost was charged to the Bodenschatz leather manufacturing firm, which in turn charged them off on income tax returns as "advertising costs." Thus, in effect, Uncle Sam bore the cost of the Nazi propaganda.

Lost the value of the work of Bodenschatz should be lost in the blazing glory of ^{wife's achievements,} his ~~work~~ the FBI recovered the following letter she sent him from Germany:

"The Secretary of State said Germany has much to thank the family of Bodenschatz for what Karl has done here and for what I have done in the States and I said: 'Well, that is very nice indeed but I could not do what I do if my husband did not encourage and endorse what I am doing as the work is not easy' to which he agreed."

When war drew near to the United States, Viola Bodenschatz ceased much of her outward activity, but when France fell she gave a "Victory Dinner" for friends; she ^(financial) continued contributions to the cause of ^(and Frederick Ernst Aubrey, both of whom) Ralph Townsend, ^(Foreign) recently pleaded guilty to Ready now to prove that Mrs. ~~Viola~~ Bodenschatz and her ~~husband~~ ~~husband~~, a Kentucky Colonel—a title that impressed the Nazis ~~immensely~~ immeasurably—were singing lyrics written to a Nazi written tune, the FBI analyzed pamphlets direct from Germany on subjects treated by the propagandist and were able to show that her writings were merely revisions of Goebbels' own phrases. To cap the climax, the Federal agents confiscated manuscripts she had sent to the printing firm for publication in pamphlet form.

~~Revisions~~ Revisions typed on ~~the~~ pages turned out from Mrs. Bodenschatz's typewriter ~~had been typed~~ ^(written) it was scientifically established in the laboratory of the Federal Bureau ^(of investigation) at Washington, ^{ON} the same machine that was used in ^{from Berlin} Margarete Gaertner's correspondence to her agents in the United States. [There need be little wonder then in learning that after ~~they heard~~ the evidence against them, Viola and George Bodenschatz last month changed ~~their~~ pleas of not guilty to guilty and ~~accepted~~ ^{with} accepted concurrent sentences of ~~five~~ five years and two years each, ~~and~~ fines totaling $4,000, for violation of two counts of an indictment charging them with having wilfully acted as agents of the German Government.

All Fifth Columnists are not registered as prescribed by law with the Secretary of State. Don't believe everything you hear.

Dear Lou:

Here's the first one. Although I'm not satisfied with it, I guess it will get by. Unless I hear from you earlier, I'll call you tomorrow afternoon about art. I'm too damn tired tonight to figure it out. X If it's OK except for any changes you want to make in pencil (which are OK with me) will you please shoot it along to Thompson as per the enclosed enveloped. But for God's sake don't make me rewrite it. Don't forget to send me the stuff you got up on the other case.

Highest regards,

Al Glusman

A Staff Correspondent of the Fort-DiPATCH

Washington, D.C., May — The FBI was ready to strike. Eight members of a Nazi spy ring had been under careful surveillance for months with each and every move and message known to agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. One spy had unwittingly led to another, ~~and~~ intercepted letters in code or invisible ink to a mass of incriminating evidence and after many months of patient observation it appeared the fish were all in the net.

Then out of heavens as blue as the sky over Bermuda ~~Robert~~ ^{"Robert"} dropped into the picture. ~~and~~ British censors relayed information to Washington that they had intercepted at the Bermuda station a letter addressed to a high ranking ~~German~~ ^{German} army officer signed only in that cryptic fashion. The writer had observed that a certain type of bacteria placed in oil tanks might cause an explosion, and asked if that had been the ~~the~~ nature of some ~~the~~ reported blasts.

To the keen-minded ^{SPECIAL AGENTS} investigators of the FBI the note ~~could have~~ ^{had} but one meaning — an unidentified and possibly dangerous enemy agent was operating in the United States. Close examination ~~of~~ ^{by} the note by handwriting experts and analysis ^{by Bureau Laboratory Technicians} of the paper on which it was scrawled ~~by Bureau laboratory technicians~~ failed to establish that "Robert" had been encountered in previous inquiries. Immediately all existing plans to close in on this spy ring ~~of~~ were suspended. The word to continue watchful waiting was sent out to the hundreds of agents engaged in counter espionage for the protection of these shores.

Thus began the search for "Robert" ~~that~~ ^{which} led over a long and complicated trail to the solution of the mystery of the missing memorandum book. As in other such cases that have confronted the ~~the~~ FBI, success came only ^{after a} seemingly interminable ~~patience-taking interval~~ ⁹⁴⁻⁸⁻³⁴¹⁻²⁵ during which small bits of the puzzle were fitted together.

One of the German espionage groups in America was headed by Kurt Frederick Ludwig, ~~who had been~~ under continuous surveillance since January, ~~1941~~ 1941. He had assumed leadership of the ~~group~~ ^{gang} a month after the FBI first placed him on the suspect list when Ulrich von der Osten, a Nazi army intelligence officer, died from injuries suffered when struck by a taxicab in New York City. At the time of the accident, unaware that he was watched by Government agents, Ludwig seized Von der Osten's black brief case and ~~disappeared~~ ^{from} vanished (save ~~the~~ the watchful eye of the FBI) into the crowd.

One by ~~one~~ ^{the} members of the group under his direction joined the parade passing unwittingly before the Federal agents. Ludwig, American-born, had lived in Germany most of his life but ~~had~~ ^{had} resided in the United States since 1940, posing as a ~~leather goods salesman~~ ^{Nazi} although actually he was a full-time, handsomely-compensated spy.

The group included ~~a~~ ^{ed} a Long Island housewife, whose home was used as a meeting place and who was preparing to rejoin her husband in Germany when arrested after committing ~~the 4.5~~ ^{to memory} facts concerning ~~the~~ ^{the} big bomber, the B-19. She also recruited assistants from her gymnastic classes at the ~~Turn Verein~~ ^{Turn Verein} and a German script school run by the ~~band~~. Among them was Lucy Rockaler, Ludwig's fairly comely 18-year-old German-born secretary, whose duties included obtaining information from soldiers on leave by using ~~various~~ ^{various} devices to which she was suited by nature. Another man had access to ship sailings; still another was a machinist who helped collect production figures; there also was Private Isaac G. Froehlich, who was paid to pass important mobilization information ~~along~~ ^{to} Lucy, who told Ludwig, who in turn sent it along by means of code ~~of invisible ink~~ ^{he} to his Nazi contacts. Or more correctly, ~~he~~ ^{he} passed as much of it along as the FBI permitted to go through.

There were also ~~many~~ ^{many} with code names (Ludwig, for example, was "Joe

as any other that had been baited

There were further messages to Germany from "Robert". ^{ultimately} They were ~~intended~~ ^{reached} and reviewed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It became apparent that ^{"Robert"} ~~he~~ was the technical advisor for a spy gang whose duty it was to analyze collected information in order to supply estimates approximating fact, after digesting information collected by other members of the group. Briefly, "Robert" assimilated ^{details} ~~information~~ published in ^{various} ~~newspapers~~ ^{magazines}, pamphlets or disclosed in loose talk, and managed to make a surprisingly accurate over-all report to Germany.

In the course of the search for "Robert" the FBI received from ^{A building} ~~the superintendent~~ of a building at 40 Wall street, a memorandum book ~~which~~ found in a lobby telephone booth. It contained notations of addresses and names of prominent people in the Nazi regime and German Army. It also contained the name, presumably of the owner, Paul Borchardt, 577 Isham street, New York. He was no stranger to the FBI. ^{had been learned} ~~Checking~~ Borchardt, it was ~~determined~~ that he had entered the United States in 1940 ^{passing} as a Jewish refugee after having spent 16 days in the Nazi Siberia of Dachau, and then had been in the custody of the Gestapo until influential comrades of his World War I Army days obtained his release and maneuvered his escape from his persecutors. It was reported he had offered himself to the ^{US} Army Intelligence; he, himself, ^{had} ~~related~~ that he he had lost his professional job in 1933 because he was ^{non-} ~~Aryan~~. He applied for citizenship within a week of his arrival; a distant relative ^{was of unquestionable} ~~employed~~ in ^{U.S.} Government service, ^{loyalty} ~~was~~ ^{is unquestioned}, a brother, also beyond suspicion was a naturalized citizen. This record ^{would} ~~should~~ satisfy anyone--anyone except the FBI.

Continuing the inquiry ~~by means best known to themselves~~, the Federal agents determined that although Borchardt lived in a $5-a-week room, he paid $1 for ~~his~~ ^{each} breakfast. It was also learned that he had been a student of economy, colonial science and English at the Universities of Berlin, Hamburg, ~~and~~ Brussels and London; that he had been sent to Africa in 1912 by the German Government on a geographical and biological mission; that later he had studied photography and flying, qualifying as ^{military} ~~a~~ ^{an} ~~expert~~.

He mapped the Lybian desert shortly before 1914 when at the outbreak of war he became a Naval aviation officer, was shot down ^(and wounded), then transferred to the Turkish Army from which he retired at the end of the war ~~armed~~ with the rank of Major. ~~He~~ 1834 He inherited $250,000 from his father's estate and in 1932 became head of the Polytechnical University at Munich, where ~~scientific~~ ^(in geopolitics) studies were secretly directed by Adolph Hitler's German army heads. He was "removed" in 1933 because of his un-Aryan attributes, but was permitted to write for a living until the Gestapo decided to ~~send him~~ send him to the concentration camp at Dachau for 16 days, shortly before he ^{went} ~~to~~ to England, then ^{to} New York.

It also was determined ^{that} ~~his~~ ^{COUSIN} brother, also presumably ^{NON-} ~~un-~~Aryan, was a high ~~ranking~~ ranking officer in the Army and had recently been decorated for valor. Incidentally, Major Borchardt also held two iron ~~crosses~~ crosses for "street fighting" during the Nazi coupes. By the time this information was established, the FBI was inclined to wonder whether Major Borchardt was really a refugee. It was ^{STRON} suspected that perhaps he might also answer to the name of "Robert."

Further investigation disclosed that his apartment contained ~~significant~~ books with significant titles on various scientific subjects, several of them relatively costly for a man with no visible means of support. He appeared particularly interested in "The Definition of Great Britain," "Boulder Dam," and "Climatic Changes in the United States." Borchardt's landlady, who had a resounding Teutonic name, had overheard several calls from "Joe," who usually introduced himself with the phrase, "I bring you greetings from friends in Munich." Clever, ~~that~~ ^{but not quite} as clever as the landlady. When the FBI learned about "Joe", they easily realized that Ludwig was "Joe Kessler." ~~_____~~

The job now was to gather the evidence that would prove that this "refugee" was actually a ~~first class~~ spy. ~~and~~ ^{and} ~~that~~ ^{that} ~~had~~ ^{had} ~~a~~ ^a ~~hand~~ ^{hand}. The manager of a building in which the ~~German~~ consulate had its office, reported that he had received instructions from the Germans to burn huge quantities of papers while they stood by. He managed to burn them in such a way ~~that~~ ^{that} they made a great flame, satisfying the witnesses, ~~but~~ ^{but} ~~he~~ ^{he} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~able~~ ^{able} to stamp out the fire the moment they departed, leaving a large ^{portion} of the documents undestroyed, ^{unburned}.

~~The~~ ^{One} cablegram turned over to the FBI read as follows:
"Restricted item. Item secret. To be decoded only by authorized persons for restricted items. Answer only by courier or secret code. According to request from P.F. Berchardt 577 Egan street, in manner you deem best to burn letter from Robert, Feb. 20, 1942."

~~Berchardt~~ ^{and} ~~was~~ ^{and} taken into custody ^{and} ~~he~~ ^{he} ~~glibly~~ ^{glibly} told the story of his persecution in Germany and explained his brother's high army status by pointing out that he was an "honorary Aryan" due to previous services to the nation. ~~He~~ ^{He} insisted that he, himself, had escaped imprisonment only through influence and denied he had been in touch with the German consulate in New York. ^{Faced} ~~Confronted~~ with the cablegram rescued from the furnace, he ~~simply~~ ^{simply} answered simply that it couldn't possibly refer to him. Confronted with the little memorandum book found in the telephone booth, he blandly disclaimed ownership although it contained his name and address. His own ~~note~~ ^{note} book, to which he had referred in his statement, had been stolen from his pocket ~~when~~ ^{when} he was watching a fire on Seventh Avenue, he said. This one? Phooie!

Meanwhile, ready now to close the trap on the Ludwig ring, FBI agents were "tagging" the ~~master~~ ^{master} spy across the country. An intensely interesting, almost humorous incident had occurred, ^{causing} ~~that~~ ^{that} ~~had~~ ^{had} ~~caused~~ ^{caused} the German agent great anxiety although his conceit was still so great that he was unaware ~~that~~ ^{that} he had been detected after being under surveillance for more than six months.

Before satisfying themselves that the Ludwig ring was completely under control agents operating directly under J. Edgar Hoover had cleaned up another ^{important} espionage case known ~~as the Ludwig case~~ ^{Dugan case} as the ~~Ludwig~~ ^{Dugan}, which will be discussed in another account. Although each group of German agents work independently of the other, it is obvious that acquaintanceships ~~are~~ ^{are} interlocking. When the Government agents entered a store to arrest a minor figure in the ~~BUCKLE~~ ^{Dugan case}, Ludwig unfortunately was present. Investigator who had been trailing him for months passed him ~~by~~ ^{without} without sign of recognition, arrested their man, and later intercepted a letter from Ludwig to his Nazi employers informing them of the arrest. It was sent on to Germany.

Ludwig, soon thereafter, "hid out" (or he so thought) at a tourist camp in Pennsylvania. He then began an automobile trek across the country, followed closely by FBI agents who followed him in relays from State line to State line. Once Ludwig asked directions of an FBI agent who was waiting to pick him up as he passed the ~~border~~ ^{border}. The master spy repeatedly doubled back in his route to set off pursuers.

The result was that ~~the~~ ^{agents} agents watched him interview soldiers near Army camps, re-questioning them after Ludwig had given them a lift; watched him photograph dams and power stations; observed him, by use of field glasses, preparing a code letter at an Ohio tourist camp; watched him burn papers in a fireplace at a Yellowstone National Park cabin; and, after his departure, salvaged the ashes for examination at the FBI laboratory. ~~He also~~ ^{He also} ~~found~~ ^{found} words such as "coast artillery", "naval reserve" and others making valuable evidence at the trial ~~(see page 10)~~.

At Boise, Montana, he mailed coded letters, a code book, magazines, and pamphlets ~~and~~ ^{and} activities and aviation data, and a package of pills used to make invisible ink. ~~He then~~ ^{He then} ~~drove~~ ^{drove} to Alaska, he left his car in storage, ~~and~~ ^{and} checks ~~and~~ ^{and} ~~drove~~ ^{drove} to himself at Seattle and took a bus to Spokane, where he

Then that superior Nazi intelligence, ~~that great German intelligence~~ of which so much is written came to the surface. He offered a friendly jailer $50,000 ~~to~~ assist in his escape, and gave the guard this oral message:

"Telephone ~~577~~ Isham avenue, New York City. Ask for Borchardt. Say: 'How is the family,' and when he answers ask him to send $200 to Salt Lake City and suggest he take a long trip out West. He'll understand." He explained confidentially to the guard that the "trip out West" was a warning to get away. He also told the friendly guard to send a message from "Joe" to a name at Buenos Aires: "Friends are sick, send help." It can be well understood ^{BY NOW} how the "guard" got in immediate touch with the FBI.

^{Later when}
At the time, Borchardt was busily engaged in making denials to the Federal agents at New York. ~~When he received the message from "Joe" in the FBI office, he~~ decided the jig was up, and stood no longer on his claim of "refugee." ^{when he was alone}

^{not march}
After his testimony before Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard ^{Brooklyn} when he said: "I would rather die than reveal any German Army secrets," the "persecuted immigrant" Paul T. Borchardt—"Robert" to the FBI—was sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary for having done well his work in the United States ~~as a military advisor~~ ^{for Germany} as a military advisor for Germany. ~~Others in the ring received sentences~~ Others in the ring received sentences varying from five to 20 years. Lucy Boehmler escaped with five because of ^{tender} her years; the others ranged from 10 upward.

Relative to Mr. Goldstein's second story on the Duquesne Case, the following matters are called to your attention:

In the last paragraph on page one and in the next to the last paragraph on page five mention is made of foreign mail drops. It appears from the story that the FBI intercepted letters and watched at these drops. This is of course inaccurate and it is believed that the story should be changed accordingly.

It is assumed that you personally covered with Mr. Goldstein the material in the last paragraph on page two and in the first paragraph on page three. In a brief review of the files on the Duquesne Case it has been impossible to identify these incidents.

The reference to "inferior" cars in the next to the last line on page five is not believed desirable.

~~It is noted that at the middle of page six reference is made to January as the date of the convictions and of course these occurred in December. It is felt that the total sentences received in the case and the total fines might well be corrected at this point.~~ omit, as this was changed by his wire.

Respectfully,

Dear Lou,

Here is the first of the final convulsion. It is almost as tough to handle as the Ducase itself, and much less fun. I hope thus far it meets with your approval.

The closing spasm will establish Heinrich after much investigation as Heinke or whatever the hell his name is. For art, we should have as much as we are permitted to have on radio messages; a shot of a microphotograph natural size and then a shot of the thing enlarged with ~~the~~ the long message to Lilly brought in by Sebold; pictures of the principals (why don't you give up and give us a shot of Sebold?) but surely Lilly Stein, ~~and~~ Heine, ~~and~~ Duquesnes and Lang. Also a picture of ~~the~~ a note from "Heinrich" bearing that signature and a ~~photograph~~ photo of the specimen taken when the typewriter was at the repairer's to show similarity. And anything else you see that is colorful.

Do you think it was cricket to check the typewriter when Heine wasn't looking?

Tch, tch.

Sebold traveled on to Mulheim and rejoined his aged mother. In need of funds he obtained employment as a skilled mechanic with the Sieman Schukert Company, a firm engaged in the construction of steam turbines under consignment from the Westinghouse Electric Company of the United States. Shortly after he went to work he received a letter informing him that "Dr. Gassner" had a matter of major importance to discuss with him. Sebold with a free man's fear of anonymous communications reported the letter to police who sent him to the office of the Gestapo. He was told to receive "Dr. Gassner."

A few weeks later "Dr. Gassner" paid him a visit. The good doctor was interested in obtaining information concerning the production of military planes and equipment in the United States. He displayed an amazing familiarity with Sebold's career as a former employee of plants engaged in aircraft production, and after long conversation

Sebold was asked to return to the United States as an espionage agent for "our society." The American, whose parentage was not purely Aryan, was non-committal.

Sebold returned to his hotel after his interview with Dr. Gassner, but the doctor was missing, and he knew then he was in the clutches of the dreaded Gestapo.

Dr. Gassner accompanied by Nicholas Adolph Fritz Ritter of the German Nazi Party, married with the activities of Nazi agents abroad, visited him a second time. Ritter, a relative of Sebold's maternal grandfather, established in Germany, agreed to act as an espionage agent for the Reich.

Sebold remained at the Elberfeld Pension at Hamburg, quarters of the Gestapo. He was told that he was a spy through the world. The daughter of Sebold's mother had lived for many years in the United States. He was told of the problems with which he might be confronted.

After the FBI had recorded these messages, Sebeld phoned Miss Stein:

"Bring you greetings from Backenkel and Grinsing," ~~he~~ made an appointment to meet her at her 79th Street apartment, ~~and~~ presented the note. She obtained a magnifying glass and applying it to the micromessage, ~~he~~ said:

"I can read it well."

During various visits with Sebeld she confided that she was employed by a counterespionage organization in Germany and that she had been so engaged in England and Belgium. She told him of an American consular official with whom she had become sentimentally entangled in Europe ~~and~~ who would supply her with information on his early expected return to the United States. She said she was having difficulty in communicating with ~~the~~ Nazi headquarters, and as a result her salary was in arrears.

Sebeld, meanwhile, carrying out ~~the~~ instructions of his Gestapo mentors under supervision of the FBI, had established a short-wave radio station for urgent messages to Germany. Even the loyal Sebeld was unaware that the operator he engaged for the work was an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Lilly Stein accepted Sebeld offer to ~~send~~ send messages. Her first urgent cry was:

"Stein says must have money quick."

In reply, Sebeld received the following in code from the Gestapo:

"Most urgently, ~~from~~ all friends, monthly production of airplanes factories. Export to all countries, especially England and France. Number, Type, date of delivery. ~~By steamer or air. Armature and armament. Payment cash and carry or credit etc. Stop.~~"

"I think I can get it," Lilly Stein said.

"Who," the woman spy asked Sebold, "is Heinrich?"

A few hours later the same cry rang through the halls of ~~the~~ ^{of} FBI quarters at Washington.

Who is ~~Heinrich~~ Heinrich?

The "Ducase," so named only because Duquesne headed the list handed by the Gestapo to Sebold of persons he was to contact in the United ~~States~~ ^{Heinrich's} States, could not be closed until ~~the~~ ^{Heinrich's} identity was established. The investigation to ~~find~~ ^{find} the industrial master mind of the largest spy ring in the ~~country~~ ^{country} began.

Washington, May 1.— Truth is stranger than fiction. It is beyond the realm of human imagination to conceive of an American citizen being impressed into the German Gestapo. Yet the records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation bear evidence that it happened. The true story of the mis-named "Ducase" departs from the field of fiction for the simple reason that no reader would believe the incredible facts. Take a look at the record.

The FBI first heard of William Gottlieb Sebald when the American consul at Geneva sent word that Sebald had obtained a new passport to return from Germany to replace the one lost at Mulheim. In the course of his interview with the consul, he had muttered quickly from the corner of his mouth:

"Have the Gemen pick me up when I get back."

His departure several months later from ~~Genea~~ ^{anchored in} Geneva, Italy, was duly reported and when his ship stopped at quarantine ~~at~~ ⁱⁿ New York Harbor, agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation found him in his stateroom. There he gave an account that taxed even the credulity of the experienced investigators of the FBI.

A naturalized citizen of the United States, former private in the first World War in the Engineering Corps, ~~of the~~ Imperial German Army, Sebald had returned to Germany to visit his mother at Mulheim. As he descended the gangplank at Hamburg, a bearded stranger swung into step beside him, pressed close and whispered:

"You will wait to hear from us in the near future."

Washington, May 11.—The startling appearance of a letter from Detroit containing important war production information, in the hands of Lilly Stein, the German spy, aroused dark forebodings at the Federal Bureau of Investigation. A sinister figure of major proportions had entered the bazaar scene for the first time. The single clue to the identity of the writer was the typed signature: "HEINRICH." Director John Edgar Hoover assigned special agents to track him down.

Throughout the investigation of the "Heinrich" spy involving 12 spies, this man previously had not been heard or seen. There was no "Heinrich" in America to whom Nazi captors had directed William Sebald, German-born, naturalized citizen of the United States, pressed into the service of the Germans when visiting his mother in Germany, and placed himself on return here in the service of the FBI.

His orders from Berlin had put him in touch with William Stein, son of Frederick Duquesne, professional international spy credited with having supplied information leading to the sinking of the ship carrying the late Lord Blakenham last war. Lang, faithless inspector of Norden bomb sights, was related to the secret device from memory to the Nazis, and as treacherous spy. William Stein, Sebald, transmitting and receiving daily short wave radio messages, and the FBI had been in touch with "Heinrich" since his arrival in the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

FBI agents immediately began a check of the Stein family and vicinity. All known radio sets were located and checked. The radio used by the spies for many months was found in the Stein home.

Letters from "Heinrich" to the FBI were found in the Stein home.

There came the fantastic touch that smacked of detective-story fiction, when a clerk at the public library reported that a man who introduced himself as a "Mr. Moore" had requested perusal of several pages of a technical volume on aviation engines. As the clerk was being prepared, she said, someone ~~had~~ ^{SPINE} over his shoulder: "Let me have it."

"That ~~is~~ ^{is} ~~the~~ ^{is} ~~book~~ ^{book} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~are~~ ^{are} ~~looking~~ ^{looking} ~~for~~ ^{for} ~~is~~ ^{is} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~one~~ ^{one} ~~you~~ ^{you} ~~were~~ ^{were} ~~told~~ ^{told} ~~about~~ ^{about} ~~was~~ ^{was} ~~it~~ ^{it}

(u) As the Detroit Maine's were being checked, an important communication reached headquarters of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The proprietor of an airplane service advised that one Edward G. Maine had ordered 60 photographs of the most common types of aircraft and later ~~inquired~~ inquired as to the location of the New York office. He had ~~been~~ given a Bridgeport Hotel as his address. It was learned that he had left a New York hotel as forwarding address. Following ~~this~~ information, Special Agents determined that at ~~the time~~ NEW YORK he had registered as ~~Edward G. Maine~~.

the wheels of the gear and the FBI had begun to grind rapidly as well as making a former prominent newspaper leader at New York reported to the FBI that he had known himself a delegate from the American Chamber of Commerce to the United Nations. Interest in, ~~Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King~~ and the FBI was growing. Unswayed by Heine's story, the

On 12/10/44, James E. Aldrich, licensed Washington ground school instructor, received an advertisement asking for aviation advice and information. The advertisement is the work of a building at Washington and is a request for information. It is wanted to inform

On the drive to Dover Airport, Heine asked Aldrich, "What is a navigator?" Receiving a proper answer, he proudly stated that his business was an expert. At the airport he asked questions concerning, especially the accepted method of silencing them. He also was interested in military liners, the use of oxygen at high altitudes, and other problems connected with crossing the Atlantic by air.

The next day he supplied a list of requisites to Aldrich, requesting information on the number of factories manufacturing planes in the United States, number of accessories; locations of plants and types of production, civilian or military; number of employees, plant capacities and years in the industry. He explained to Aldrich that he needed the information in order to attach a list with the Ford Motor Co.

Aldrich gave a $20 bill from a roll of large denominations, he also displayed a list of people he intended to see at Baltimore, Riverdale, Maryland and New York, all engaged in war production. He hinted that he could get Aldrich a job in Germany, close to the General Staff of the German High Command. Long before Aldrich received a letter from Heine at Detroit seeking further information, Aldrich was in touch with the FBI. The technical laboratory of the Bureau was specially placed into service and it was quickly determined that the letter from Heine was typed on the same machine used on the messages from "HEINRICH." Now certain of their quarry, the agents of the FBI ceased worrying about "Heinrich" and concentrated the investigation on Edmund C. Heine.

It was learned he was born in Germany in 1892, emigrated to the United States in 1914 and was naturalized in 1920, listing as references German Ambassador Hans Luther and Prince Louis Ferdinand, Berlin. Although he was reputed wealthy he had no visible means of support. In 1940, he had sought to procure a passport for Germany but his request was refused by the State Department. His statement that he wanted to sail on urgent business for the Ford Company was investigated.

It was learned that Heine had sought to arrange a meeting with Alfred Eschke, Hitler's industrial god-father in the United States and Henry Ford and that Ford had refused to receive the Nazi.

Ford officers reported that Heine had been general manager of the company in Germany until 1935, after which time he worked for the Chrysler Motor Corporation in its foreign service department in Spain until 1938. Later his application for a job with Ford was rejected on the ground that he was a Nazi.

During his stay in the United States, he had corresponded with the Industrial Press, Inc., publishers of an aviation magazine, obtaining three copies dealing with aviation. The Industrial Commission at Faversham, E. Ang., sent him a letter on the industrial advantages of Faversham with particular information as to the names of employees at the aircraft factories and the Commission at Faversham, E. Ang., San Diego, in a letter asking for the purpose of visiting the plant and wishes to construct a similar plant. Heine inquired of the Commission at Faversham, inquire how long the process from the plant at Faversham, E. Ang., to the plant at San Diego.

He visited the Division of Rubber Chemistry at the University of California, the use of rubber in making tires for aircraft. He also visited the the use of aluminum in the construction of aircraft. Heine also visited the American Magnesium Corporation at Faversham, E. Ang., and obtained information with the technical name of the material. Heine also visited the material were inspected. Heine also visited the plant at Faversham, E. Ang., at Lima, Peru.

It was also reported that Heine had visited the plant at Faversham, E. Ang.,

When the BB had pleaded guilty or stood convicted in federal court last December, the Federal Bureau of Investigation turned over to the Treasury Department more than $15,000, the balance of funds received from Germany intended to finance operations of the espionage ring, but used instead to pay the expense of the investigation and counter-espionage of the FBI, including construction and operation of the radio short wave set. The BB literally paid for their mistakes, and paid well.)

Heine busily continued making the case for his conviction. Once he encountered a man whom he mistook for a former associate in Germany and confided in him certain phases ~~of the nature~~ of his work.

"What will you do if the United States gets into this fight," ^{asked} the man whose identity Heine had mistaken, ~~asked~~.

"We'll take care of that by creating the proper kind of sentiment in this country," Heine replied.

It was soon thereafter that Heine's Underwood typewriter, punished severely by lengthy correspondence ~~intended~~ intended for German eyes, stood in need of repair. Watchful Federal agents, no longer concerned with the annoying question: "Who is HEINRICH" typed ~~of~~ specimens from the machine before it was returned to the owner. Needless to say, it was the typewriter of ^{the} Heine and Heinrich letters. The ^{DUCASE} case was complete, and ~~specimens were ripe for examination~~ ^{January}.

~~Heine~~ After his arrest, ^{Heine} he confessed ~~he~~ he had been enlisted for espionage duty by a Dr. A.H. Wirtz in Berlin, and that he had submitted because he wanted to return to the United States and he was broke. On a calling card bearing his wife's name, the following code was found in his wallet:

H.E.	441	76K
L.S.	127	54	H
H.J.	L.P.	MEM	5785
E.E.	L.P.	17	5257
A.H.W.	15

He said he had forgotten what the code represented except it noted addresses for Nazi agents, AHW for Wirtz; H.E. for Henry Eilers; L.S., Lilly Stein; H.J., Junge; E.E., Ernesto Eilers, and others for his aliases; K for Koenig, H for Heinrich, B for Blackwell, J for Jack. He didn't know what the numbers meant, but didn't care. The FBI does. The Fifth Column is under control.

May 16, 1942

Dear Lou:

This is the end of the current correspondence but, I hope, the beginning of a friendship. I think ~~you~~ you can tell that there is no organization in the world that I admire more than the FBI, and I have a right to admire it because I know how you work. After all, it is self praise. I work that way myself.

I was particularly pleased to hear from Mr. McGuire today that you liked ^(I have tried) the yarns to carry the water on both shoulders by presenting a more or less lurid account and still keeping the facts in shape if not in sequence. Thanks a great deal for your patience with me during my stay at Washington, and for your ready understanding of my problem.

As to art, I don't know what we can add to the last request except I think we should have specimens of letters from "Heinrich" and letters from Heine, showing the proof of the ~~padding~~ pudding. I think a picture of the code on the back of the calling card would add to the account. If you've got a picture of Aldrich, he certainly is a hero and could be played up as such. Then, if that can be handled, how about a shot of a mail drop. Ok, I'll quit.

Incidentally, McGuire said he was having difficulty getting anything off the film showing the Bodenshatzes with high German officers. I wish he'd send along anything he gets, no matter how bad it is, because it would serve to authenticate the story and a little voice whispers to me that it needs authenticating.

Thanks, and highest regards,

Al G. [Signature]

Dear Lou:

What's wrong, pal? You've got me worried. I'd sure like to hear from you so I'd know how we are getting along together.

As to art on the enclosed, I'd like to have anything you can rake up to enliven the yarn--pictures of the wire segments, shot showing some sort of an examination in the laboratory, picture of the printed sign and specimen showing Etzel's spelling when he wrote the words for you. And anything else you think of.

I'll appreciate it if you send it all along with the attached to Don Thompson.

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

Washington, May 1944 — One of the most powerful weapons of any nation at war is sabotage. The enemy within the walls remaining undetected until the auspicious moment, may strike suddenly and with frightening effect. Industries have been crippled, transportation systems paralyzed, countless soldiers and civilians have lost their lives in nations where systematic sabotage has been used by the enemy as an instrument of war.

It is one of the many preventative functions of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, by order of the President of the United States, to protect this country to the utmost from the deadly stab of the saboteur. So vital is this phase of modern warfare that the President deemed it necessary to formally urge all citizens and law enforcement agencies to promptly report to the FBI all information or reasonable suspicions regarding acts of sabotage affecting the war effort.

With grave concern, then, Federal agents considered the information communicated secretly by officers of the Glenn L. Martin Co., near Baltimore, one of the largest manufacturers of military aircraft for the Army and Navy of the United States. It is at these factories that the huge Martin B-26^{is} constructed, tested and flown into service. ^{Twenty} ~~Twenty~~ acts of wilful destruction on completed planes had been discovered. The wiring of interphone communication in some of the bombers had been cut; sometimes three or more cables in one ship had been cut. In several instances sections of wire were cut out and thrown aside.

Although damage to the bombers had been found before the planes were taken into the air and no loss of life had occurred, the implications of the malicious acts were intensely alarming to the Martin management, the FBI and Army Intelligence Corps officers participating in the ~~investigation~~ investigation. (more)

Shortly after the inquiry began, a workman whose background and conduct made him a likely suspect was watched with cautious thoroughness. Within a few days, the man under suspicion was transferred to another department. No further evidence of sabotage came to light for six days and the investigators began to breathe more easily again. ~~On the~~ ^{the} ~~seventh day~~ ^(nine bombers) were found to have been vitally damaged in a manner similar to previous destruction ~~in~~ and the plant again teemed with fear and suspicion.

Again a suspected ~~an~~ employee whose movements had been the subject of careful scrutiny was moved to another section. The following five days were uneventful and the hopes of the investigators that a solution was near, soared. Exactly at 6:30 a.m. on the thirteenth day of the investigation ~~the~~ ^a Martin B-26, officially inspected and approved ~~in~~ thirty minutes earlier, was found sabotaged. An electrician entering the section after inspection made the discovery that several wires had been severed.

Inquiry in this part of the plant disclosed that a workman had been seen in the plane between the time the inspection was completed and the electrician reported his fearsome find. This employee, too, was placed under surveillance, his home and family associations painstakingly investigated, and his political views ~~organization~~ ~~activities~~ checked. Without his knowledge of the scrutiny, he was established as a splendid, conscientious mechanic, a loyal American beyond suspicion of misconduct. The stone wall loomed again.

Meanwhile the ~~scientific~~ ^{Technical} laboratory of the FBI was deep in work on the scanty clues left by the ~~unknown~~ saboteur. Sometimes the wires had been snapped with an instrument; at other times they had been torn out and still at other times they had been broken by leverage or sheer ~~pressure~~ ^{pressure}. Certain instances were found in which the aluminum tubing of hydraulic lines were pinched together, making them ineffective. The wires were sent to the technical laboratory for ~~analysis~~ ^{analysis} of markings made in damaging them and inspection began of tools in the plant to find the one that would ~~match~~ match the markings that might be found on the cut wires. ~~There~~

Despite elaborate precautions including special arrangements by management of the Harbin plant and the cooperation of trusted employees in the confidence of the FBI and Army Intelligence, the saboteur defiantly continued his operations at irregular but ~~regular~~ ⁽ⁱⁿ⁾ ~~regularly~~ ⁽ⁱⁿ⁾ frequent intervals. Almost under the very noses of the nation's most skillful investigators he compiled ^(on various days) the following partial list of depredations:

At 2 p.m., three wires in the center section of a bomber that had been inspected a short time before, were found severed.

At 9 a.m. two wires were found cut in a plane that had passed inspection at 7 a.m.

At 9:45 p.m., one wire had been twisted over another which was ~~cut~~ out through, in a bomber inspected and passed at noon that same day.

At 2:45 a.m., four wires were found to have been severed in a plane previously inspected, and ~~about~~ about four hours later when the plane was checked again it was found that five wires in the bomber's plug run and two ~~to~~ to the pedestals ~~had~~ had been snipped since discovery of the first damage.

At 6:30 a.m. inspection disclosed that six wires of an interphone ^{system} ~~had~~ had been cut in a bomber that had passed inspection at 5:50 and again at 6 a.m. In this instance a workman was found in the act of closing his tool box by the third inspector who discovered the damage. Fellow workmen who had observed his actions cleared him of suspicion.

Occasionally reports were received that sections of ^(hydraulic) rubber tubing cut from the planes by the saboteur had been ~~was~~ dropped in gasoline tanks. Had this act remained undetected, the rubber eventually would disintegrate and clog fuel lines, possibly causing engine failure when the ^{bombers were} ~~planes~~ in the air. (more)

~~There was no known identification of the saboteur. The FBI technical laboratory reported that he had used his work tool in clipping wires in such a manner that work was done with Barcolo pliers.~~

Every measure known to scientific crime detection was utilized but still no clue appeared to the identity of the audacious saboteur. With the assistance of officers of the Martin factory, each damaged plane was "charted", showing precise locations of the bombers, a close approximation of the time of the sabotage, and the position as far as possible of each employee in the plant. The FBI laboratory reported that the saboteur had contrived to clip wire in such a manner ~~that~~ as to leave no telltale identifying marks except that it could be definitely ~~asserted~~ ^{asserted} that the work was done with Barretto made pliers.

Proceeding on this scanty information, examination was begun of each pair of Barretto pliers in the Martin plant and the spectrograph ~~examined~~ at the FBI technical laboratory was called into service in an effort to determine if ~~microscopic~~ ^{particles} microscopic ~~fragments~~ of the severed wires still clung to any single workman's pliers. Scientific ~~analysis~~ ^{analysis} might disclose that a certain ~~in~~ ^{minute} tool had been used in cutting the wires of a specific plane by comparing the particles on the pliers to fragments recovered from the bomber. The only result obtained by ~~investigation~~ was the report from the laboratory on the examination of one pair of pliers which had been matched with a section of ~~damaged~~ ^{damaged} aluminum tubing:

"The markings on the damaged tubing indicate that the tool used was the same kind of tool but was in better condition than the tube submitted for examination." Thus, another clue went up the line, and another suspect was discarded. Nearly 300 employees were questioned and the laboratory check of the tools continued.

Then, almost three months to the day after the search for the saboteur began, the ship that all patient investigators await. Drunk with his success at defying the best brains this country had to offer in the field of criminology, the elusive saboteur left a handprint at the scene of one of his crimes. In the navigator's compartment of the ship, Martin B-2 bomber, a handprinted cardboard sign was found:

NOTE to DHT:
(please center and stet spellings)
Government & ~~Hitler~~
(Hiel) -- AHG.

~~REDACTED~~
"B-26
"MARTIN'S DEATH
TRIP
"MARTIN'S GOVERNMENT
"GRAFT PROJECT
"HIEL HITLER"

The message was lettered in blue and red pencil, but most significant to the FBI was the fact that it was a first class free hand printing job and it undoubtedly had been done by a trained or talented artist. A check of company records had disclosed that one Michael W. Etzel had set forth in a questionnaire that his hobby was "sign painting." Etzel was employed as a painter, with the duty of placing decalomanias, or squad insignia, on the finished bombers. His record as a workman was splendid—it was said that he knew 200 of the various insignia by memory.

With ~~many~~ many others known to have been in the section with the damaged, sign-adorned bomber, Etzel was questioned. He denied having been in the plane, but fellow workmen disputed him and one eye witness told of seeing him enter. Questioners noted that he carried both red and blue pencils in his working clothing. He was ~~discovered~~ discovered.

Later an alert and loyal associate reported that Etzel asked:

"Was anything painted found for Hitler or against him?"

At last the FBI had it's No. 3 suspect and Etzel was placed under immediate surveillance, and questioned ~~no~~ no further for a six week interval during which no act of sabotage occurred at the Glenn L. Martin Company's Baltimore plant. The principles of counter-espionage were placed into effect by the FBI. It was determined he was American born 22 years ago of German parentage, that he still had relatives in Germany and that he had made pro-Nazi statements to associates and had given the Nazi salute. He once had painted a swastika on his tool box which contained a pair of ~~pliers~~ pliers.

At the end of the sixth week of observation, Etzel was taken in custody for questioning ^{when} he reported for duty on the midnight shift. He denied any act of sabotage or that he had ~~printed~~ printed the sign. He was asked to write a list of words including "heil" and "government." He ~~was~~ spelled both precisely as they ^{USA} were ^{ON the} ~~on the~~ placard: "hiel" and "government." After ~~three~~ hours of questioning he admitted first one act of sabotage, then another until all had been accounted. He told Federal agents:

"I feel that the German people are alright and everything is the fault of the German Government, not the people themselves, and I did not want these places to be used against the German people and so I damaged the ships."

As for the note ^{ending} "Heil H₁tl_{er}," he ^{Etzel in Court} said he was unable to recall having printed it. The fumes from a cleaning fluid he used in his work, he said, may have confused him, and made him ill and led him to leave the message. It was not established that he was in the pay of the Nazi government.

Five minutes after the first witness for the Government testified ~~in~~ against Etzel ~~in~~ November, he withdrew his plea of not guilty to the 34 counts of his indictment. Said Federal Judge William G. Coleman, pronouncing sentence:

"What you have done and have brought about are no different than ~~that~~ for which men are held guilty of treason. Your acts are tantamount to attempted murders."

Then, in the language of lawyers, Judge Coleman "threw the book at him," sentencing the saboteur to 15 years imprisonment.

If a saboteur is suspected, don't wait to have the suspicion confirmed. Report it to the FBI.

Dear Mr. Goldstein:

After an extended absence on the West Coast, I wanted to drop you a note to tell you how much I enjoyed my visit with you while you were in Washington some weeks ago.

I have also seen the first of your series of articles which appeared in last Sunday's edition of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and I thought you did a very fine job in handling the story. I know that it must have interested the readers of the Post-Dispatch.

With best wishes and kind regards,

Pictures Found in Spy's Luggage and Camera After His Arrest by FBI Agents

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
May 24, 1942
SUNDAY EDITION

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 22. — THE FBI was ready to strike. Eight members of a Nazi spy ring had been under careful surveillance for months with each move and message known to agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. One spy had unwittingly led to another and after many months of patient observation it appeared the fish were all in the net.

Then out of heavens as blue as the sky over Bermuda "Robert" dropped into the picture. British censors relayed information to Washington that they had intercepted at the Bermuda station a letter addressed to a high ranking German army officer signed only in that cryptic fashion. The writer had observed that a certain type of bacteria placed in oil tanks might cause an explosion, and asked if that had been the nature of some reported blasts.

To the keen-minded specialists of the FBI, the note had an meaning—an unidentified and possibly dangerous enemy agent was operating in the United States. Close examination of the note by handwriting experts and analysis by Bureau laboratory technicians of the paper on which it was scrawled failed to establish that "Robert" had been encountered in previous inquiries. Immediately all existing plans to close down this spy ring were suspended. The word to continue watchful waiting was sent out to the hundreds of agents engaged in counter espionage for the protection of these shores.

Thus began the search for "Robert" that led over a long and complicated trail to the solution of the mystery of the missing memorandum book. As in other such cases that have confronted the FBI, success came only after a seemingly interminable patience taxing interval, during which small bits of the puzzle were fitted together slowly into the final, complete pattern.

One of the German espionage groups in America was headed by Kurt Frederick Ludwig, under continuous surveillance since January, 1941. He had assumed leadership of the gang two months after the FBI first placed him on the suspect list when Ulrich von der Osten, a Nazi army intelligence officer, died from injuries suffered when struck by a taxicab in New York City. At the time of the accident, unaware that he was watched by Government agents, Ludwig seized Von der Osten's black brief case and vanished from the watchful eye of the FBI into the crowd. One by one the members of the group, under his direction joined the parade, passing unwittingly before the Federal agents. Ludwig, American-born, had lived in Germany most of his life, but had resided in the United States since 1940, posing as a salesman, although actually he was a full-time, handsomely compensated Nazi spy. The group included a Long Island housewife, whose home was used as a meeting place and who was preparing to rejoin her husband in Germany when arrested after committing to memory facts concerning the United States big bomber, the B-19. She also recruited assistants from gymnastic classes at a turnverein and a German script school run by the Bund.

Among them was Lucy Boehmler, Ludwig's 18-year-old German-born secretary, whose duties included obtaining information from soldiers on leave. Another man had access to ship sailings; still another was a machinist who helped collect production figures; there also was Private Rene G. Froehlich, who was paid to pass important mobilization information to Lucy, who told Ludwig, who in turn sent it along by means of invisible ink to his Nazi masters. Of more correctly, he passed as much of it along as the FBI permitted to go through.

There were eight in all—many with code names (Ludwig, for example, was "Joe Kessler"), but no "Robert." The Ludwig trap, or any other that had been baited could not be closed until his identity and connections were established. More work for the FBI.

There were further messages to Germany from "Robert." Ultimately they reached the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It became apparent that "Robert" was the technical adviser for a spy gang whose duty it was to analyze collected information in order to supply estimates approximating fact, after digesting information collected by other members of the group. Briefly, "Robert" assimilated details published in various newspapers, magazines, pamphlets or disclosed in loose talk, and managed to make a surprisingly accurate over-all report to Germany.

IN the course of the search for "Robert," the FBI received from a building superintendent on Wall street, a memorandum book found in a lobby telephone booth. It contained addresses and names of prominent people in the Nazi regime and German Army. It also contained the name, presumably of the owner, Paul Borchardt, 577 Isham street, New York. He was no stranger to the FBI.

Borchardt, it had been learned, had entered the United States in 1940, passing as a Jewish refugee after having spent 16 days in the Nazi Siberia of Dachau, internment camp, and then had been in the custody of the Gestapo until influential comrades of his World War I army days obtained his release and maneuvered his escape from his persecutors. It was reported he had offered himself to the United States Army Intelligence. He, himself, had related that he had lost his professional job in 1933 because he was non-Aryan. He applied for citizenship within a week of his arrival; a distant relative, employed in United States Government service, was of unquestionable loyalty; another close relative, also beyond suspicion, was a naturalized citizen. This record would satisfy anyone—anyone except the FBI.

Continuing the inquiry, the Federal agents determined that although Borchardt lived in a $5-a-week room, he paid $1 for each breakfast. It was also learned that he had been a student of economy, colonial science and English at the Universities of Berlin, Hamburg, Brussels and London; that he had been sent to Africa in 1912 by the German Government on a geographical and biological mission; that later he had studied photography and flying, qualifying as military observer.

He mapped the Libyan desert shortly before 1914 when at the outbreak of war he became a Naval aviation officer, was shot down and wounded, then transferred to the Turkish Army from which he retired at the end of the war with the rank of Major. He inherited $250,000 from his father's estate and in 1932 became head of the Polytechnical University at Munich, where studies in geopolitics were secretly directed by Adolf Hitler's German army heads. He was "removed" in 1933 because of his un-Aryan attributes, but was permitted to write for a living until the Gestapo decided to send him to the concentration camp at Dachau for 16 days, shortly before he went to England, then to New York.

It also was determined that his cousin, also presumably non-Aryan, was a high-ranking officer in the Army and had recently been decorated for valor. Incidentally, May Borchardt also held two Iron crosses for "street fighting" during the Nazi coupes. By the time this information was established, the FBI was inclined to wonder whether Maj. Borchardt was really a refugee. It was strongly suspected that perhaps he might also answer to the name of "Robert."

FURTHER investigation disclosed that his apartment contained books with significant titles on various scientific subjects, several of them relatively costly for a man with no visible means of support. He appeared particularly interested in "The Definition of Great Britain," "Boulder Dam," and "Climatic Changes in the United States." Borchardt's landlady, who had a resounding Teutonic name, had overheard several calls from "Joe," who usually introduced himself with the phrase: "I bring you greetings from friends in Munich." Clever, but not quite as clever as the landlady. When the FBI learned about "Joe," they easily recalled that Ludwig was "Joe Kessler."

The job now was to gather the evidence that would prove that this "refugee" was actually a Nazi spy. Fate took a hand. The manager of a building in which the Nazi consulate had its office reported that he had received instructions from the Germans to burn huge quantities of papers while they stood by. He managed to burn them in such a way they made a great flame, satisfying the German witnesses, but there were others who were able to stamp out the fire the moment the Nazis departed, leaving a large portion of the documents undestroyed.

One unburned cablegram turned over to the FBI read as follows: "Restricted item. Item secret. To be decoded only by authorized persons for restricted items. Answer only by courier or secret code. According to request from P. T. Borchardt, 577 Isham street, in manner you deem best to burn letter from Robert, Feb. 20, 1941."

Borchardt was taken into custody and glibly told the story of his persecution in Germany, and explained his cousin's high Army status by pointing out that he was an "honorary Aryan" due to previous services to the nation. He insisted that he, himself, had escaped imprisonment only through influence and denied he had been in touch with the German consulate in New York.

Faced with the cablegram rescued from the furnace, he answered simply that it couldn't possibly refer to him. Confronted with the little memorandum book found in the telephone booth, he handily disclaimed ownership, although it contained his name and address. His own notebook, to which he had referred in his statement, had been stolen from his pocket when he was watching a fire on Seventh avenue, he said. This one? Phooie!

Meanwhile, ready now to close the trap on the Ludwig ring, FBI agents were "tagging" the master spy across the country. An interesting incident had occurred, causing the German agent great anxiety, although his conceit was still so great that he was unaware he had been detected after being under surveillance for more than six months.

Before satisfying themselves that the Ludwig ring was completely under control, agents operating directly under J. Edgar Hoover had cleaned up another important espionage case known as the Duquesne case, to be discussed in another account. Although each group of German agents work independently of the other, it is obvious that acquaintanceships are interlocking. When the Government agents entered a store to arrest a minor figure in the Duquesne case, Ludwig unfortunately was present. Investigators who had been trailing him for months passed him without sign of recognition, arrested their man, and later intercepted a letter from Ludwig to his Nazi employers informing them of the arrest. It was sent on to Germany.

Ludwig, soon thereafter, "hid out" (or he so thought) at a tourist camp in Pennsylvania. He then began an automobile trek across the country, followed closely by FBI agents who followed him in relays from State line to State line. Once Ludwig asked directions of an FBI agent who was waiting to pick him up as he passed the boundary. The master spy repeatedly doubled back in his route to set off pursuers.

The result was that agents watched him interview soldiers near Army camps, re-questioning them after Ludwig had given them a lift; watched him photograph dams and power stations; observed him, by use of field glasses, preparing a code letter at an Ohio tourist camp; watched him burn papers in a fireplace at a Yellowstone National Park cabin, and later, after his departure, salvage the ashes for examination at the FBI laboratory to find words such as "coast artillery," "anti-aircraft" and others making valuable evidence at the trial.

At Butte, Montana, he mailed coded letters, a code book, magazines, pamphlets on war activities and aviation data and a package of pills used to make invisible ink to an address in New Jersey. At Missoula, he left his car in storage, checked his suitcase and typewriter to himself at Seattle and took a bus to Spokane, where he was arrested. (The pictures shown at the bottom of Page One of the Everyday Magazine were among those found in Ludwig's possession.)

Then that superior Nazi intelligence of which so much is written, came to the surface. He offered a friendly jailer $50,000 to assist in his escape, and gave the guard this oral message:

"Telephone 577 Isham avenue, New York City. Ask for Borchardt. Say: 'How is the family,' and when he answers ask him to send $200 to Salt Lake City and suggest that he take a long trip out West. He'll understand." He explained confidentially to the guard that the "trip out West" was a warning to get away. He also told the friendly guard to send a message from "Joe" to a name at Buenos Aires: "Friends are sick, send help." It can be well understood by now how the "guard" got in immediate touch with the FBI.

Later when Borchardt was busily engaged in making denials to the Federal agents at the New York FBI office, he decided the jig was up, and no longer stood on his claim of "refugee," when he was advised of the message from "Joe."

After his testimony in March before Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard, Brooklyn, when he said: "I would rather die than reveal any German Army secrets," the persecuted immigrant, Paul T. Borchardt—"Robert," to the FBI—was sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary for having done well his work in the United States as a military adviser for Germany. Others in the ring received sentences varying from five to 20 years. Lucy Boehmler escaped with five because of her tender years; the others ranged from 10 upward.

Dear Mr. Hoover;

Thank you for the gracious note. It was nice to have talked with you while I was in Washington and I hope that our paths soon cross again.

I am glad that you were pleased with the first

"Have the G-Men Pick Me Up"

Country's Largest Spy Ring Was Broken Up by F. B. I.
 as Result of This Urgent Request
 By Alvin H. Goldstein

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

WASHINGTON, June 13. TRUTH is stranger than fiction. It is almost beyond the realm of imagination to conceive of an American citizen being impressed into the German Gestapo. Yet the records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation bear evidence that it happened. The true story of the mis-named "Ducase" departs from the field of fiction for the simple reason that no reader would believe the incredible facts. Take a look at the record.

The F. B. I. first heard of William Gottlieb Sebald when the American consul at Cologne sent word that Sebald had obtained a new passport to return from Germany to replace his lost at Mulheim. In the course of his interview with the consul, he had muttered quickly from the corner of his mouth:

"Have the G-men pick me up when I get back."

His departure several months later from Genoa, Italy, was duly reported and when his ship anchored at quarantine in New York Harbor, agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation found him in his stateroom. There he gave an account that taxed even the credulity of the experienced investigators of the F. B. I.

A naturalized citizen of the United States, former private in the first World War in the Engineering Corps, Imperial German Army, Sebald had returned to Germany to visit his mother at Mulheim. As he descended the gangplank at Hamburg, a stranger swung into step beside him, pressed close and whispered:

"You will wait to hear from us in the near future." Sebald traveled on to Mulheim and rejoined his aged mother. In need of funds, he obtained employment as a skilled mechanic with the Sieman Schukert Co., a firm engaged in construction of steam turbines under consignment from the Westinghouse Electric Co. of the United States. Shortly after he went to work he received a letter informing him that "Dr. Gassner" had a matter of major importance to discuss with him. With a free man's fear of anonymous communication, Sebald reported the letter to police, who sent him to the office of the Gestapo. He was told to receive "Dr. Gassner."

A few weeks later "Dr. Gassner" visited him. The doctor was interested in obtaining information concerning the production of military planes and equipment in the United States. He displayed an amazing familiarity with Sebald's career as a former employee of American plants engaged in aircraft production, and after long conversation urged Sebald to return to the United States as an espionage agent for "our society." The American, whose parentage was not purely Aryan, was non-committal.

WHEN Sebald returned to his hotel after his interview with Dr. Gassner, his passport was missing, and he knew then he was in the clutches of the dreaded Gestapo. Dr. Gassner, accompanied by Nicholas Adolph Fritz Ritter of the German Secret Service, charged with supervision of the activities of Nazi agents abroad, visited him a few weeks later. Relatives of Sebald's maternal grandfather, in Germany, were Jewish, they recalled. He agreed to act as an espionage agent for the Reich in the United States.

Sebald forthwith reported at the Klopstock Pension at Hamburg, quarters of espionage agents in training for assignment as spies throughout the world. The daughter of the pair who operated his living quarters had lived for many years in the United States, and knew, or thought she knew, the problems with which he might be confronted.

It was here that Sebald received instruction in the preparation of coded messages and in the use of the Leica camera for preparations of microphotographs of plans, maps and other items not fitted for transmission in brief messages; it was suggested that he employ a short-wave radio operator and establish communication directly with Germany; that he join the National Guard and obtain anything general as to military forces, ship movements, or other items of interest contained in newspaper clippings or overheard in conversation.

His training course at Hamburg completed, he was permitted to return home. In the back of his watch case were five microphotographs, reduced to a size no larger than a postage stamp. One contained instructions as to the preparation of a code to be used in communicating with his German principals, while another listed data Sebald was to obtain. The three additional microphotographs were to be turned over to other German agents in the United States, listed as Col. Fritz Duquesne, Lilly Stein and Everett Roeder. He also was instructed to assume the name of "Harry Sawyer," and to get in touch with Herman Lang, an inspector for the firm manufacturing an extremely secret bombsight.

After F. B. I. agents heard his account, he was directed to a lodging house and permitted to leave the ship. But as he went down the gangplank, a nod from an agent at the rail identified him to men below, who watched his every move for two days without his knowledge. Satisfied Sebald had followed instructions thus far, the F. B. I. re-established relations. From $1000 supplied him by the German officers, he was permitted to establish more comfortable quarters but not to purchase the Leica camera they had instructed him to buy.

His first chore was to present his credentials to Lilly Stein, 232 East Seventy-ninth street, as directed by the Nazis.

LILLY BARBARA CAROLA STEIN, the F. B. I. learned, was 26 years old, good-looking, Vienna-born, and lived by vicarious means at 232 East Seventy-ninth street, New York City. Although well born in Austria, her finances were limited, and she had attempted to borrow money from an employee of the German Consulate.

Claiming to be partly Jewish, she emigrated to this country in 1939, asserting her intention to become a citizen less than a year later. She was an old friend of Heinrich Sorau, who had helped train Sebald in the work of the Gestapo, and who enrolled her in the German espionage service with early assignments to Belgium and England. Finally, she was assigned to the United States.

To Lilly Stein, Sebald presented the following note transcribed from his microphotograph by the F. B. I.:

"Dear Miss Stein: I have met your friend Heinrich and I have regards from Bachhenkel and Grinzing to extend to you. I shall be glad if I can extend them personally and beg you to advise me of the time and place I can meet you. Harry Sawyer."

He also delivered the micromessage to Miss Stein which, despite its miniature proportions, disclosed the German Government required information as to whether International Telephone & Telegraph Co. had offered French and British agents new methods of bombing; if whereabouts of a French manufacturing plant at Montreal could be determined; about a professor said to have developed a new type of anti-aircraft weapon; if a shell with an "electric eye" was being manufactured in the U. S.

They wanted to know about developments in aircraft; details of preparations for bacteriological warfare in the United States; if units of the regular Army and Navy were being sent abroad as "volunteers," information concerning mobilization and shipping of war supplies to Europe, including the names of ships and the dates of departures. A code to be used in reply was attached.

After the F. B. I. had recorded these messages, Sebald phoned Miss Stein:

"I bring you greetings from Bachhenkel and Grinzing." He made an appointment to meet at her Seventy-ninth street apartment, and presented the note. She obtained a mounted magnifying glass and applying it to the micro-message, said:

"I can read it well."

DURING various visits with Sebald she confided that she was employed by a counter-espionage organization in Germany and that she had been so engaged in England and Belgium. She told him of a prominent American with whom she had become sentimentally entangled in Europe who would supply her with information on his early expected return to the United States. She said she was having difficulty in communicating with Nazi headquarters, and as a result her salary was in arrears.

Sebald, meanwhile, carrying out the instructions of his Gestapo mentors secured a radio station—it was erected by the F. B. I. and soon it was in operation to handle urgent messages to Germany. Even the loyal Sebald was unaware that the operator he engaged for the work was an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Lilly Stein accepted Sebald's offer to send messages. Her first urgent cry was:

"Stein says must have money quick."

In reply, Sebald received the following in code from the Gestapo:

"NEED URGENTLY, FROM ALL FRIENDS, MONTHLY PRODUCTION OF AIRPLANE FACTORIES. EXPORT TO ALL COUNTRIES, ESPECIALLY ENGLAND AND FRANCE. NUMBER, TYPE, DATE OF DELIVERY. BY STEAMER OR AIR. ARMATURE AND ARMAMENT. PAYMENT CASH AND CARRY OR CREDIT ETC. STOP."

"I think I can get it," Lilly Stein said.

Gradually, as Sebald worked himself into the confidence of Miss Stein, names of other spies were obtained and after months of watchful waiting it seemed certain that the entire gang was under surveillance. Thirty-two names came to light, and precise legal evidence was gathered by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation sufficient to convict them of espionage.

It was determined that Roeder, American born, an expert on firearms, was delivering information gained in that connection to Sebald for transmission via short wave radio to the Nazis; Duquesne, a professional spy for the highest bidder, was supplying information he picked up here and there from loose talkers and braggarts in Government service; evidence was gathered against Lang of the bombsight plant, and others who ultimately sought to clear their information by Nazi instruction through "Harry Sawyer."

Secretly, the F. B. I. took motion pictures of members of the spy ring when each arrived at Sebald's quarters to pass along messages of vital concern to the German Government. After these messages had been transmitted, replies were received and hundreds of different instructions were relayed through the F. B. I. to Nazi espionage agents. Lilly still was sending urgent messages for money. The case seemed complete with 32 in the trap.

* * *

BUT again the patience of the F. B. I. was rewarded. One day Sebold received an urgent call from Lilly and visited her at her apartment. She turned over a letter postmarked Detroit, containing important and accurate information on production of the aviation industry in that area, with particular emphasis concerning developments in Diesel engines. Lilly Stein said the letter came as a surprise to her, that she was unaware of the identity of the sender and that she knew no one in Detroit. The letter was signed "Heinrich." She was acquainted with no Heinrich in America, she said, but perhaps it was intended that Sawyer relay the information to Berlin. Sebold agreed.

"Who," the woman spy asked Sebold, "is Heinrich?"

A few hours later the same cry rang through the halls of F. B. I. headquarters at Washington.

Who is Heinrich?

"The 'Ducase,' so named only because Duquesne, professional international spy, headed the list handed by the Gestapo to Sebold of persons he was to contact in the United States, could not be closed until 'Heinrich's' identity was established. The investigation to find the industrial master mind of the largest spy ring in the country began.

LILLY STEIN . . . SHE CARRIED ON GERMAN ESPIONAGE WORK IN BELGIUM, ENGLAND AND FINALLY THE UNITED STATES.

"AS HE DESCENDED THE GANGPLANK AT HAMBURG, A STRANGER SWUNG INTO STEP BESIDE HIM, PRESSED CLOSE AND WHISPERED: 'YOU WILL WAIT TO HEAR FROM US IN THE NEAR FUTURE.'"

ANOTHER PICTURE OF MISS STEIN. SHE USED HER PHYSICAL CHARMS TO ADVANTAGE IN CARRYING ON HER WORK.

IT WAS a fantastic cat-and-mouse game which the Federal Bureau of Investigation played with a Nazi spy ring before pouncing on the 33 members who were sentenced to prison early this year. Reports from the spies to Germany and instructions for them from Germany passed through the hands of the F. B. I., for the transmitter of these messages, William G. Sebold, German-born American, was voluntarily cooperating with the F. B. I. while pretending to serve the Gestapo; the G-men had provided his radio station and its operator. This supervision of the ring's clearing house for information gradually informed the F. B. I. of the identity and activities of the agents, and motion pictures of many of them were secretly taken when they visited Sebold's office. A two-part story of the successful spy hunt, giving details taken from the files of the F. B. I., begins today in the Everyday Magazine of the Post-Dispatch, part of a series of articles on F. B. I. cases. On this page are some of the pictures the G-men took.

callers made secretly by the G-men. Duquesne, native of South Africa, adventurer and professional spy, regarded as one of the leaders of the ring, received an 18-year sentence for espionage and a two-year sentence, the maximum, for failure to register as a German agent.

Hartwig Kleiss, former chef of the United States liner America, who drew a six-year sentence for espionage.

He obtained blueprints of structural details when the ship was being made into a transport.

Herman Lang conversing with Sebald—under the eye of a hidden F. B. I. camera. Lang, who was employed as an inspector at a factory making bombsights, was later convicted of failing to register as a German agent and conspiring to deliver vital defense secrets to Germany. He was sentenced to two years on the former count, 18 years on the latter.

Frederick Duquesne, member of a Nazi spy ring which was operating in the United States before being rounded up by the F. B. I. He is seen here on a visit to the New York office of William B. Seboid last June. Seboid, who transmitted messages by radio between the spies and Germany, posed as a Gestapo agent but actually worked with the F. B. I. The first part of a detailed story of this celebrated spy case appears in the Everyday Magazine of the Post-Dispatch today. These photos and the others on the page are from motion pictures of Seboid's

Paul Fehse reporting at spy headquarters. Fehse pleaded guilty to the espionage conspiracy charge, and was sentenced to 15 years in prison. He was a transmitter of information to Germany.

Erwin W. Siegler, who pleaded guilty of failing to register and conspiracy, and got two years on the first count, 10 on the second.

Henrich Clausing. This call at spy headquarters was made a few weeks before the ring was rounded up. Clausing was sentenced to two years for failure to register, eight for conspiracy. He pleaded guilty to both charges but refused to tell the Court the source of his orders from Germany.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. TOLSON

Re: Al Goldstein
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Some time ago Al Goldstein asked me for material on which to do a story on rumors. This was covered in a blue memorandum which I submitted to you on June 20. You O.K.'d the memorandum as did the Director. When it came back to me, I tore up the memorandum. The matter was mentioned to the Director over the phone and he inquired as to the authorization.

The memorandum we are sending Goldstein is similar to other memorandum we have given to Fred Collins and others and is absolutely safe.

Since Goldstein has been very friendly and received a raise as a result of his other series of FBI stories, I thought that by all means the Director should drop him a note and transmit the material to him rather than to furnish it to him orally.

Respectfully,

L. B. Nichols

Dear Lou:

Enclosed is a copy of the story I wrote on the information you furnished on rumor mongers. I felt it wasn't necessary to send it to you for "censorship" as it complied not only in letter but in spirit to the material relayed to me. However, it occurred to me that it might help in arranging our interview with Brother H., as it might indicate that I understand what is ^{it} all about and that I love the F.B.I., and don't think I'm kidding.

I hope Hoover gives me a chance to write a swell story about him. I'll appreciate your trying to arrange it.

Yours,

al
Al Goldstein

P.S. Please pay no attention to some of the bad sentences and omitted words in the attached carbon as I took care of them (I hope) in editing, a job which I trusted to you on the other series.

Washington, July .--One of the most powerful weapons of any nation at war is sabotage, and one effective form of sabotage as an instrument of violence is rumor-mongering. The foe within the walls, having prepared a path to panic by prompting false gossip, may strike suddenly and with frightening effect.

In nations where systematic sabotage has been utilized by the enemy, industries have been crippled, transportation facilities paralyzed and countless soldiers and civilians slain because a state of hysteria prevented re-establishment of order.

The Axis knows that dissemination of gloomy gossip, if undisputed and unchecked, tends to destroy morale by arousing suspicion as effectively as a bomb dropped plump in the center of an ammunition dump destroys munitions, and it is encouraged as a prelude to such violent action. Rumors planted by foreign short-wave radio or propaganda agents to shake the faith of citizens in their own Government, are no more harmful than the insidious, unfounded talk of loyal, though witless Americans. Repetition by the loose-talker of an unconfirmed whisper of suppressed enemy success, disaster or impotency is an act no less of abetting the Axis than harbouring saboteurs landed on American shores from a submarine.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, by specific order of President Roosevelt, is charged to protect the United States from the deadly stab of the saboteur, and agents of the F.B.I. ^{investigate both} do not ~~differentiate~~ between gossip-mongers and ~~explosives~~ dynamiters. Each is considered equally dangerous to the war effort.

first ad goldstein

Thus, the F.B.I. has tracked to the source literally ^{hundreds} ~~thousands~~ of old-wives tales and bits of vicious gossip that have spread from tongue to ~~gum~~ tongue with astonishing rapidity. They range in gravity from the ridiculous to the sinister, an example of the former being the report that Japanese disguised as salmon were captured by Federal officers in the Columbia River, of ~~and~~ the latter the story widely circulated in New York that boat loaded with ~~the~~ the bodies of war casualties in an unspeakable condition, causing workers to refuse to approach the vessel in the harbor. This latter canard was so widespread it was necessary for local newspapers to publish denials.

"The invasion of America took place years ago," Director John Edgar Hoover, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, declared recently in his commencement address at Notre Dame University, warning gossip as a symptom of hysteria.

"Foreign foes preached their gospel of hate that too often fell on fertile soil," Hoover said, "with the result that our Nation has been weakened by forces pulling in every direction. This did not occur over night. The invasion of America took place years ago. The conspiracies of these traitors have prompted have prompted Hitler to boast that America is on the brink of revolution and that, when he desires, he can precipitate a state of civil strife. But America has profited by mistakes of the past. No longer are we as susceptible to Nazi lies and propaganda."

"One task before college graduates today is to apply their intellectual curiosity to exposing the motives of those who preach a foreign "ism," instead of good, old fashioned Americanism. When you hear wild tales which cause you to wonder, 'What's the use?' find out what is back of these foul mouthings before you pass them on as the gospel truth. A rumor monger can do as much damage as an armed invader. Make it a cardinal rule of your life not to become the innocent purveyor of specious gossip."

second ad goldstein

To illustrate, a current story is being widely circulated. The gossip mongers heard 'on good authority' that ground glass had been placed in sponges consigned to our armed forces so that when wounds are treated contamination and infection will set in. When this rumor reached the F.B.I., special agents were detailed to get the facts. This is what happened.

"An instructor in a medical school had explicitly pointed out to his class the necessity for the proper handling of sponges. He had observed that in the first World War a few sponges had been contaminated by ground glass. A member of the class told the story to a friend. Within a few days it had become so distorted that from a propaganda viewpoint it excelled the lies of Goebbels. Multiply this yarn by ten thousand and you have some idea of the falsity of some stories being circulated which should be considered an insult to the intelligence of our people. It is such idle gossip that has created hysteria."

With the bombing of Pearl Harbor, the wheels of the war-rumor factories began to turn at top ~~speed~~ speed. From California came a lurid report that a Japanese spy had plowed furrowed messages on a hillside of his farm. After the rains, when the field was green, it was found that the "secret writing" was J-O-E, the first name of the loyal American farmer.

F.B.I. investigators proved untrue the story that Japanese in Hawaii, under the very noses of ~~the~~ Army, Navy Intelligence and Bureau agents, had cut X swatches in cane fields pointing the way for Japanese airmen to Pearl Harbor and other military objectives. They exploded the yarn about the U.S. Army motorcycle messenger, said to have been shot in the leg with a .22 caliber bullet by a sniper in Honolulu. He had been hit by a pebble, but the story grew faster than the five little peppers.

third ad goldstein

Also false was the Honolulu "scare story" that the newspaper advertisement of a Japanese merchant contained coded instructions to spies instead of bargain prices of silks; that a Japanese saloon-keeper was caught and shot at his short-wave transmitter during the Pearl Harbor raid, and that many Japanese "ham" operators, frequent Army post visitors, had been in radio communication with ~~the~~ enemy aircraft carriers and planes. The gossip, even more widely circulated than the foregoing, that Japanese truck drivers drove from side to side of the road from Honolulu to Hickham field to delay American pilots frantically racing to their planes, was without foundation in fact. But these and similar falsehoods terrified many residents of the community.

Typical of the many baseless rumors received at the Bureau was the one about the enemy submarine being transported by truck, on public highways near the West Coast. The "submarine" turned out to be a cigar-shaped boat, containing none of the armament flatly reported by "eyewitnesses," purchased for $25 by its owner for a fishing vessel. More logical but just as false was the widespread rumor that 3000 acres of land in the vicinity of vital war installations had been honeycombed by ^{Jap-dug} tunnels. ~~along highways~~ The rumor started from the fact that there was an abandoned mining shaft on the property.

Recently residents of a Pacific Coast town were frightened by a report that spread like wildfire that there would be an enemy bombing on the place on a specific day, included in the rumor. The story was that during blackout practice at such and such a school, one of the children had remarked that perhaps there would be no need for another. But a small Japanese child had innocently replied that there would be a blackout on the particular day, because her father had predicted an air raid at that time. The father, so the story went, had been arrested. The F.B.I. established that the child's quoted remark had never been uttered and, of course, that no arrest had been made.

fourth ad goldstein

There was a panicky report that a man had been observed driving an automobile equipped with searchlight and telegraph set, obviously engaged in espionage. Federal agents searching for the spy, found a practical joker who had purchased a toy "telegraph set" for $1.75, had attached one key to the sun visor at the driver's seat, and had concealed the other under the floor mat. In this manner, he was able to pretend to signal passing airplanes with the visible key, and to "receive" by tapping undetected with his foot. Acquaintances described the rumor-starter, a traveling salesman, as just a big, overgrown kid. That, to paraphrase the old song, is how rumors are born.

An automobile burst into flame in a building housing some military equipment. In it was a home-made contraption consisting of alarm clock, mouse trap and matches. At alarming speed, the report spread that saboteurs had planted an infernal machine in the building. Investigation disclosed the culprit was a man, suffering from an old head injury, had taken this peculiar manner to destroy his automobile because his wife frequently wanted him to take her driving, and he thought he was getting too little sleep.

Shortly after the United States entered the war, the F.B.I. was informed that a woman's canary had died from drinking water poisoned by a saboteur. It was determined that the canary had not been fed for several days before death, the cause of which was from overeating when finally given food and water.

A woman employee of a gas mask manufacturing company visited a physician for treatment of ~~some~~ hand infection, caused by ~~xxxxx~~ a neglected needle puncture. Shortly thereafter, an account was rampant that someone in the plant had been caught puncturing masks with a needle, rendering them ineffective if used during a raid. The birth of the rumor was traced to a party, where it had been told to a woman employee of the plant by a truck driver, who had heard that defective masks had been found at the factory. The truth

fifth ad goldstein

~~Summary~~

New York City was thrown into great confusion last December with circulation from of a report that enemy bombers were only two hours ~~away~~ and headed for town. Schools were dismissed, and pupils instructed to remain in their homes, traffic was interrupted, air-raid wardens summoned from offices, Newspapers published the story and at least one issued an extra, radio stations ordered listeners to "stand by" and, in short the entire city was jitters. The incident, the F.B.I. reports, was by nothing but an accumulation of rumors.

It began with a report that the police department of another Eastern Seaboard city had instructed police of a nearby town to have schools dismissed and order children to their homes. This developed from a call by an air raid warden in the small town who had instructed teachers to send the children home for a short time, presumably as a drill.

The warden's instructions were misunderstood and the children dismissed for the day.

When this reached the ears of the State Chief Air Raid Warden's office, ~~messengers~~ were sent to control centers advising that an air raid was expected in New York City and ordering the evacuation from public school buildings. This made the rumor official. The result and the subject of comment by newspapers and radio. It should have reached the hearts of all foreign agents in the area.

"Spies taking pictures of defense plants," have turned out on investigation to be newspaper photographers snapping pictures for the real estate page; reports that a college laboratory was ~~made~~ the object of saboteurs have sprung from the remark of an instructor that the school was engaged in some experimental research for the Government; stories that ground glass was found in a consignment of canned shrimp were predicated exaggerated statements by an alarmist who had come across a few crystals of struvite, a natural substance of various types of canned seafood.

sixth ad goldstein

There was a widely circulated rumor in Western states that a secret sign was pasted on automobile windshields by members of subversive organizations. It turned out that a match manufacturer had employed youths to distribute the stickers as part of an advertising campaign. The foreman of a defense plant sent a boy to a nearby shoe shop for emery dust for factory use. At an amazing speed the rumor spread that emery dust was being ~~planted~~ thrown into machinery by saboteurs. Investigation eliminated any attempt at sabotage.

A blue light ~~for~~ at the top of of a seabo rd hotel, led to a report that during blackouts it was used to signal ships at sea. It was determined that the light was caused by the elevator switch. A report that a war plant was to be dynamited on a given day, causing great consternation among employees and others in the area, was traced to trace: to an evesdropper in a hotel lobby who overheard a conversation between two executives of the company in which one remarked: "That won't come off till Monday." The rumor monger was unable to explain why he assumed this to mean an explosion.

it is found
Not infrequently when rumors are traced, they have come to Mr. A from Mrs. A after she had returned from a tea party. Then they are often traced to Mrs. B who freely admits that Mrs. C told her that German Reservists employed in the local airplane plant were responsible for the airplane crash in which soldiers were killed. In this identical kind of case, it developed that Mrs. C ~~may~~ was angry because her son ~~may~~ was unable to find employment at the plant although native born, while naturalized citizens were at work there.

One elderly woman told her 87-year-old husband she was going to the mountains, adding she had heard a conversation on the street car in which it was said that West Coast cities might be bombed. He repeated the story, supplying from his imagination names, places and dates. The rumor traveled rapidly but finally was traced back to the pair by the F.B.I.

seventh ad goldstein

It is in this manner that the gossip spreaders and rumor mongers serve the Axis nations by circulating unfounded accounts which tend to create suspicion, distrust and uncertainty, and inviting panic and hysteria in the event of true mishap. It is the urgent request of Director Hoover that people who encounter the loose-talkers refrain from passing the stories along. If it must be told, tell it to the F.B.I.

Dear Lou:

I received the material on rumor-mongers directly from Mr. Hoover, as you probably know, and finally got the story off to the office last night. Will you please convey my thanks to him for the information and also for the copy of his address to the graduating class at Notre Dame, from which I quoted appropriate sentiments.

Thanks, also, and many of them, to you for all the help you have given me, and I hope that soon we shall find something with which I can trouble you again. If you want, I'll let you know when the story appears, as I presume both you and Brother H. will want to see how it looks in print.

Meanwhile, if there's anything I can do for you, let me know and if you see anything in which you think I would be interested I would sure like to hear about it. Next time your boys go fishing for saboteurs, tell them to catch one for me.

At 12:35 P. M. today, I talked with SAC Norris, of the St. Louis Office, who advised that the St. Louis Post Dispatch contemplated running a highly commendable editorial on the Director's anniversary in tomorrow's edition.

He did not know yet just what it will say but will keep the Bureau informed. He also advised that the St. Louis Globe Democrat, in tomorrow's issue, will carry a story on the Director.

Mr. Norris stated that he talked with Mr. Eaton, Editor of the Star Times, who expects to use a photograph of the Director along with the President's letter to the Director, in the Sunday issue of the Star Times. I telephonically read the President's letter to Mr. Norris and it was taken down by Miss Brady in his office. Mr. Eaton has assigned a Mr. Minor, a writer of the Star Times, to get up a story along with some photographs about the Bureau and Mr. Norris has given him considerable information, including photographs taken at the St. Louis Office that depict the following scenes:

A complainant entering the office reception room.

An Agent receiving the complainant for interview.

The complainant being interviewed at a desk by an Agent.

A scene showing the files being checked in the Chief Clerk's Office.

A scene of a clerical employee at a teletypewriter.

A scene looking at a fingerprint card.

A scene showing the complainant leaving the office.

Agents McVey and Yaucey were used in these photographs. Both are good looking Agents who make an excellent personal appearance. Norris stated that the Bureau is very creditably represented in these photographs and he is confident that the Star Times will give the Bureau a very favorable write-up.

Respectfully,

J. J. McGuire.

THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE WRITTEN BY ALVIN H. GOLDSTEIN, STAFF CORRESPONDENT OF THE ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH, IS BEING FORWARDED FOR THE APPROVAL OF MR. NICHOLS. QUOTE. WASHINGTON, JULY TWENTY FIFTH DASH SHORTLY AFTER ENACTMENT BY CONGRESS OF THE LAW SETTING G-MEN ON THE BLOODY TRAIL OF GANGSTERS, KIDNAPERS AND RACKETEERS, A FAMOUS NEWSPAPER COLUMNIST WROTE AN ARTICLE CRITICISING JOHN EDGAR HOOVER, DIRECTOR OF THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, FOR REMAINING SECURELY IN HIS OFFICE WHILE HIS AGENTS CARRIED ON THE HAZARDOUS WORK ALREADY MAKING HIS NAME LEGEND IN AMERICA. BEFORE PUBLICATION, HOWEVER, NEWSPAPER ACCOUNTS MENTIONED HOOVER'S PRESENCE AT THE CAPTURE OF A DANGEROUS CRIMINAL AND THE ARTICLE WAS DISCARDED. PARAGRAPH HOOVER LEARNED OF THE INCIDENT ONLY AT A LATTER MEETING WITH THE COLUMNIST WHEN THE LATTER RECOUNTED IT AS AN AMUSING ANECDOTE. IMAGINE HOOVER'S AMAZEMENT WHEN HE SUBSEQUENTLY SAW IN NEWSPAPERS AN ARTICLES BY THE SAME WRITER CRITICISING THE DIRECTOR FOR PARTICIPATING IN RAIDS THROUGHOUT THE NATION INSTEAD OF REMAINING AT WASHINGTON TO ATTEND TO ADMINISTRATIVE DUTIES. AND, SINCE THE DAY HE TOOK OFFICE SO IT GOES. PARAGRAPH HE HAS BEEN CHARGED WITH SEEKING PUBLICITY OVER-EAGERLY AND, IN THE SAME BREATH WITH SUPPRESSING INFORMATION, HE HAS BEEN ACCUSED OF WITCH-HUNTING OR QUOTE RED-BAITING UNQUOTE BY THE OVER-ZEALOUS INVESTIGATION OF LIBERALS, AND, BY THE SAME VOICES, OF UNDULY FRIENDLY RELATIONS WITH LEFT-~~WINGERS~~ HE HAS BEEN CRITICIZED

FURTHERMORE, HE DOES NOT DRINK EXCEPT FOR AN OCCASIONAL GLASS OF SHERRY OR CORDIAL AFTER A MEAL, WHEN WHILE RELAXING HE MAY SMOKE ONE CIGAR. THIS, HOWEVER, FAILS TO PREVENT APPEARANCE OF ITEMS SUCH AS THE ONE RECENTLY SUBMITTED BY A WIDELY SYNDICATED GOSSIP COLUMNIST TO THE EFFECT THAT IF HOOVER IS SEEN DRINKING TOMATO JUICE INSTEAD OF HIGHBALLS IN THE EVENING, ONE CAN EXPECT AN IMPORTANT DISCLOSURE FROM THE FBI NEXT MORNING. PARAGRAPH QUOTE, I HAVE BEEN CRITICIZED FOR GOING TO PRIZE FIGHTS AND FOR WATCHING THE HORSES RUN, UNQUOTE. HOOVER CONTINUED. QUOTE, CERTAINLY, WHEN I HAVE THE OPPORTUNITY I ATTEND THE FIGHTS AND VISIT THE TRACKS, I HAVE SEEN MORE DISGRACEFUL CONDUCT IN ~~PARK AVENUE~~ HOMES THAN AMONG MY ASSOCIATES AT THE FIGHT RING OR RACE TRACKS. Douglas Chandler
Constance Drexel
Edward Leopold Delaney
Gertrude Hahn
Otto Kroischweitz

We had a photograph on only one of these, Gertrude Hahn.

Mr. Goldstein was later advised that we had no photographs available.

He wanted to be remembered to you.

A GREAT F. B. I. JOB.

It is impossible to read the details of the F. B. I.'s roundup of the "Terrible" Touhy gang without warm appreciation of the thoroughness and complete adequacy with which this outstanding Federal agency does its important and dangerous work.

In accounting for these seven criminals, the F. B. I. has completed a notable piece of detective and police work which may be summarized thus:

Dec. 16—Mathew Nelson captured in Minneapolis.

Dec. 19—William Stewart captured in Chicago.

Dec. 28—Eugene Lanthorn and St. Clair McInerney shot to death in Chicago in an attempt to escape from their hideout.

Dec. 29—Roger Touhy, leader of the gang, Basil (The Owl) Banghart and Edward Darlak captured in their Chicago apartment.

The circumstances of the apprehension of Touhy and the last two of his fellow gangsters were intensely dramatic, not for the sake of drama, of course, but because the situation made them so. The apartment was surrounded by heavily armed men and floodlights erected in the darkness. A loud-speaker system was installed. Then at 5 a. m., after families in the apartment had been evacuated, the lights were set ablaze and the three hiding desperadoes were ordered over the loudspeaker to come out one at a time. They came without resistance, because resistance was useless. The man hunt which had lasted from Oct. 9 was all over.

Director J. Edgar Hoover, who personally supervised the roundup and took pains to give credit to the Chicago police for their part, expressly said that the F. B. I. was not investigating the prison break because his agency did not have the jurisdiction. Illinois may well wish that the F. B. I. did have this jurisdiction. For, although it is almost three months since that amazing mass escape, no responsibility for it has been fixed. Gov. Green took personal command of the investigation and promised that no one would be shielded. Why should it take Illinois longer to find out whether political mismanagement of its prison had anything to do with the break than the F. B. I. required to account for all seven fugitives—seven desperadoes from "the most vicious gang in criminal history"?

How was it that these seven convicts were conveniently together? How was it that they could escape with such relative ease? How did they happen to have arms at their command in prison? What is the State of Illinois—and at the moment this means the administration of Dwight H. Green—going to answer these questions?

MEMORANDUM

Re: WALTER KAPPE

Walter Kappe, alias Walter Kappel, thirty-seven, is a Lieutenant assigned to the Intelligence Section of the German Army. He has served as an instructor in the Sabotage School operated by the German High Command near Berlin. He has been under orders to come to the United States to take charge of a contemplated German sabotage organization, with headquarters in Chicago, Illinois.

Walter Kappe was born January 12, 1905, at Alfeld, Germany. He first arrived in the United States on the SS Orduna on March 5, 1925. He filed a petition for citizenship at Kankakee, Illinois, in June, 1925; however, he never acquired citizenship in the United States.

While in the United States, he was active in promoting various German Societies. Prior to Hitler's rise to power, he was an active advocate of Nazism and boasted of his services for the Nazi party.

In May, 1931, he was given the position of Telegraph News Editor for the "Freie Presse," Cincinnati, Ohio. While in Cincinnati, he was a member of the German-Hitler Group. He was also a member of the Teutonia Club which he claimed was sympathetic with the Hitler movement.

RECORDED 94-8-341-48
FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION
OCT 16 1943
U. S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Kappe was the leader of a movement which endeavored to organize a National Socialist Party in the United States as early as 1932. At that time, Kappe was described as an American Correspondent for the Nazi Press with headquarters at 1050 Waveland Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, where he edited the Nazi pamphlet, "Vorpsten."

Kappe was closely associated with Fritz Gissibl, one of the organizers of the Teutonia Society which was founded in Chicago on October 12, 1934. This organization was later known as "Friends of New Germany," which later became the German-American Bund.

Gissibl fled from the United States in 1934, returning to Germany, one year after he organized the "Friends of New Germany," aided by Kappe and several other Nazi sympathizers.

Kappe, an agent of the Ausland Organization, is reported to have furnished a list of American newspapers to his headquarters in Germany, which were favorable to the Nazi Regime. While in Cincinnati, Kappe made frequent trips to Chicago, and for a short period of time lived in Detroit, then moving to Chicago where he became editor of the "Deutsche Zeitung," the official organ of the Teutonia Society. This paper later became the "Deutscher Weckruf und Beobachter," the organ of the German-American Bund with offices in New York City. Kappe, according to reports, was one of the founders of this paper in 1935.

The German-American Bund year book in 1937 was edited by Kappe, at which time he was known as the National Supervisor of press affairs for the Bund.

Kappe, with three others, was arrested in New York City, on February 18, 1936, on a charge of kidnaping J. F. Paffrath, then financial secretary of the Deutscher Konsum Verband. These charges were dismissed, however, on February 25, 1936, in the City Magistrate's Court in New York City.

Fritz Kuhn, one time Bund leader, ousted Kappe from the Editorship of the "Deutscher Weckruf und Beobachter" in 1937, at a time when Kappe was referred to as No. 1 Nazi in the United States. Kuhn suspected Kappe of checking on his activities and submitting reports to the German Consulate in New York City.

During his stay in the United States, Kappe was a frequent lecturer in various cities and contributed articles to German newspapers. Kappe sailed from New York City on the SS St. Louis on June 12, 1937.

Upon returning to Germany, Kappe has served in various capacities. He was Propaganda Director of Radio Station DJB in Berlin and has had control of all portable radio equipment for purposes of propaganda, sabotage and espionage.

Dear Sir:

Mr. RAY WEBSTER, reporter for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, called at the St. Louis Office and stated that his paper desires information upon which to base a feature article regarding the activities of WALTER KAPPE. He states that his paper is of the opinion that such an article may be helpful in locating KAPPE in the event he should come to St. Louis.

It has been suggested by Mr. WEBSTER that if such material can be made available, that there be included any exhibits which might be used in connection with the article, such as communications sent out by KAPPE to his associates in this country.

Please advise this office as to whether such material is available for release to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Dear Mr. Hoover,

Wouldn't "at an satisfy most readers of such casual publications as news-

It occurs to me that dissemination of specific information of this kind is exactly what German agents are seeking for purposes of destruction.

CASE A-255: Wilton E. Hall, aged 42, is the publisher of both newspapers in Anderson, S. C. "We recently had a series of suicides, all in a short space of time," he told Mrs. Crane and me as we were visiting in his home. "In one case, for example, a young wife accidentally swallowed roach powder and died. Her husband brooded to the point where he purchased some of the identical roach powder and committed suicide, leaving a note for his parents that said he loved his wife so much he couldn't live without her. In another case, a husband died of a heart attack. His wife brooded for a few days and then attired herself in the identical clothing worn by her husband at the time of his death. Then she killed herself. Several more cases just like these occurred within the space of a fortnight in our community.

THERE IS A LAW in psychology to the effect that love draws people closer and closer together, even to the point where married couples may almost fuse their personalities and have the same food appetites. An introverted individual, without a host of external contacts or obligations, has much time to brood about the loved one who has passed onward. Soon the desire to join the loved one becomes so strong that it may lead to behavior like that which Mr. Hall described. Auto-hypnosis takes place. The victim begins to think about going to the dead mate. This thought repeats itself until the victim is fascinated or self-hypnotized. There is another law in psychology that we tend to act upon an idea unless an opposing thought intervenes. Living alone without children or other strong distracting objects, these brooding people may become self-hypnotized with the idea of crossing the Great Divide.

THE DESIRE TO identify ourselves with our loved ones may even reach the state where we dress in the same apparel or cherish some souvenir, such as a lock of hair or handkerchief, and press it to our heart. Some people jump out of windows or over cliffs because of this same dominance of a single thought that begins going round and round in their minds until they act upon it. If dogs have been known to lie upon the graves of their departed masters until they were emaciated from hunger, you can see why the human wife or husband may become a victim of love's magnetism. Any shy, dreamer type of person who tends to brood alone, and who has few social connections, ought to be watched by the relatives

GROOMS have always known that carrots put a lovely sheen on the coats of their horses. Nutritionists talk about what carrots do for our eyes. Since carrots are so valuable and are usually so plentiful, meal planners are encouraged to find different ways of serving them. The gingered carrots of today's recipe are delightfully different.

Gingered Carrots.

Eight whole carrots (one and one-fourth pounds), one and one-fourth cup boiling water, one teaspoon salt, three tablespoons sugar, one-fourth teaspoon ground ginger, one tablespoon margarine. Wash and scrape carrots. Add the salt and water. Cover and cook for 20 minutes or until carrots are tender and the liquid is cooked down to one-fourth cup. Combine the sugar and ginger and sprinkle over the carrots. Add the margarine. Gently turn the carrots in the liquid while cooking until they are coated with the thickened syrup. Serve hot. Four servings.

For the Youngest Book Fanciers

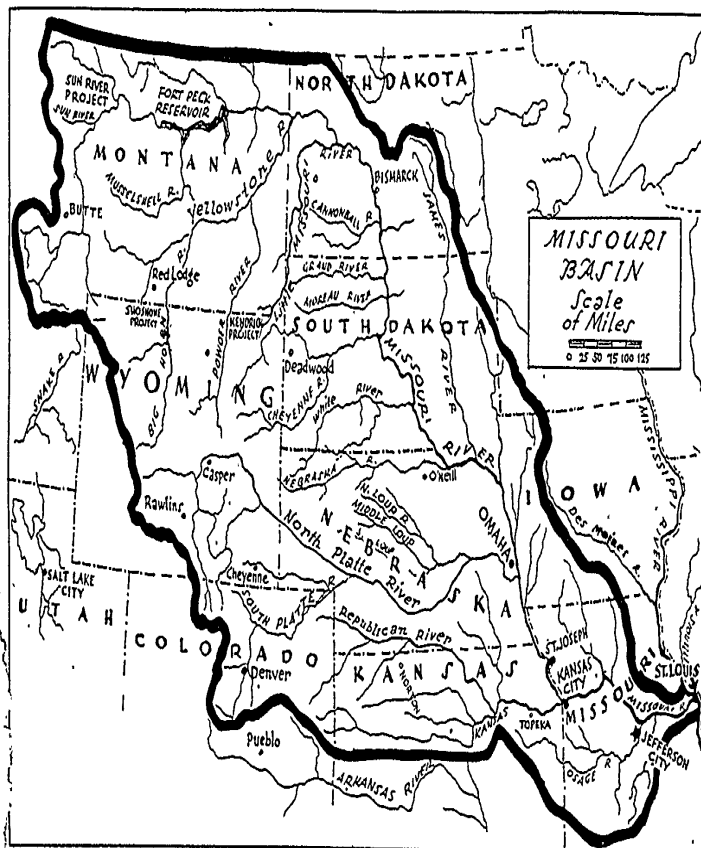

"Everybody Has a House," by Mary McBurney Green; Pictures by Jeanne Bendick. (William R. Scott, Inc., New York.)

"Saturday Flight," by Ethel Wright; Pictures by Richard Rose. (William R. Scott, Inc., New York.)

These books for children between the ages of 2 and 4 are interesting to their clientele.

"Everybody Has a House" presents dog, cow, bird, squirrel, mouse, rabbit, pig, snail, boy and girl, and their respective abodes. Miss Bendick's drawing is fair, but there is some of it that a 2-year-old child is not going to swallow.

"Saturday Flight" tells how a boy and girl go to the airport and take a ride in a plane. Except for the trees—which one 2-year-old, at least, declines to be a party to—the objects are all identifiable, and the subject matter gives the child a good opportunity to become acquainted with field and stream, houses, trains, cars and other elements of the landscape, particularly as viewed from the air.

Soldiers as Farm Helpers

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

The fact that the nation's farmers may have to abandon part of their land due to the man-power shortage and late planting season should be a matter of grave concern to everyone.

If the farmers are unable to produce food, then how can we feed the people and armies, here and abroad?

There are many of us in the armed forces in camps all over the United States who may never go overseas into combat. Instead of letting us remain here in comparative comfort, why not call on the Army to help produce food?

Many thousands of men would be glad to help the farmers. In fact, they would feel as if they were contributing more to the war effort. It would ease the man-power burden considerably.

Hospitality to Service Men

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

As a St. Louis service man recently returned from the West Coast, I want to comment on St. Louis hospitality. The USO at Kiel Auditorium does an excellent job, and the theaters are to be complimented on their policy of half-price admissions for members of the armed forces. May I suggest one thing more—that automobile drivers who have room make a practice of helping out service men and women who are waiting for transportation?

PFC. W. G. KLEIN.

There were some who thought upon the words of Pilate, who said in fear to the chief priests and Pharisees, against the rising of the deceiver: Ye have a watch.

For although this vision was far in space from the reign of Tiberius Caesar and far from the lands of Judea and Galilee, there were wicked men who had brought darkness across the waters, and who kept iron watch against deliverance in a place of strife and shadow and desolation.

There were some who believed not in the wondrous sign. They said: One year ago, to the middle of the month, a like thing was seen to the north of Copenhagen. Yet this was no cross, but the great rock called Gibraltar, and the bay thereof, and the growing green about it, and the structures of man upon it, and it vanished after three hours with the coming of the Nordic night.

And they said: In the air itself are the makings of visions, and the heat and the light of it, moisture and ice of it, bring to the sight such snares for the mind of man that he shall fall down and declare glory to a false truth.

And there were others who said: Did not such wondrous things take place in the land of Egypt? Was not the sea divided? Was there not a cloud by day to lead them, and by night a light of fire? Did not waters gush from the smitten rock, and was not manna and flesh rained from the heavens that man might eat angels' food? There was a bush that burned. There were tablets struck from the stone of Sinai. There was why must we line up in close formal them? When was it ever possible to make feeling come and go with the application and release of publicity? Is mother to become a Community Chest drive? If so, the job of remembering her should be delegated to a bureau which would select a gift, an appropriate message go with it, and above all a time when such services were not being advertised to the free winds.

Mother's day is a Frankenstein creation. Memory of her mother, Anna Jarvis, its spinster founder, waged a campaign of letters urging others to "visit your mother, wear a flower in her honor, and display the American flag." Or seven years later, she was working even harder to stem the rising tide of commercialization. Better years of heartache followed. In desperation she brought lawsuits, was arrested for disturbing the peace of a mothers' meeting, sought out and denounced the Postmaster General for issuing Mother's day stamp. And in November, 1917 she voluntarily entered a sanitarium, money gone, health broken, mind unhinged. If others depict commercialized holidays, it was given to Anna Jarvis to be lost in the widening gulf between her ideal and the organized movement.

An organized concentration of sentiment, however never so genuinely felt, cannot take the place of unstudied feeling and thoughtful act.

The basic idea in political censorship on war fronts seems to be that no news is good politics.

se service-acquired disabilities with diseases of the heart, blood vessels, lungs and gastro-intestinal system, together with arthritic and other joint and structural conditions aggravated by war service.

This is, of course, only a partial list. In order of numbers of cases, the neuropsychiatric ranks first with heart disease, eye conditions, tuberculosis and physical deformities.

Of 4700 cases recently discharged in which psychoneurosis was again first, second came ulcers. A great many cases of these ulcers have been cured by changing man's job in the Army. Perhaps that might be applied to industry.

b Placement by Doctors

A complete physical examination will assist employment experts in selecting the best type of work. It may be necessary to transfer these men several times before the right niche is found.

I recently heard of a man from one of the combat areas who was put to work in a department where riveting was being done. The noise was too much like machine guns. He could not take it. He was transferred then to the office, but here the noise of the typewriters got him. He was let go.

Perhaps this man was unemployable for the present. On the other hand, there might have been a quiet spot somewhere if they had cared to try again.

ment may have to be considered. Some may have to be assigned to light work with reduced hours or intermittent labor.

All ex-service men will have some problems of readjustment, whether they are disabled or not. Even those apparently perfectly normal will be under some strain in the transition from an active out-of-door life to a routine indoor task. They will become dissatisfied and restless, particularly those who have somewhat unstable temperaments. The disabled will lack confidence. They will be anxious about the future and uneasy about their relations with others. In this sort of situation, grievances and complaints can multiply.

Then there is the hero who has been promoted to fairly high rank. He, too, will have difficulty in returning to undistinguished civilian life.

All these men will require special consideration and a painstaking understanding on the part of those who deal with them.

ONLY TWO ARGUMENTS

From the Daily Oklahoman.

If Senator Truman of Missouri should be nominated for the vice-presidency, we shall hear two arguments repeated over and over throughout the campaign. His supporters will say that even if he was sent to the Senate by the Pendergast machine, he has made an exceptionally fine Senator. His opponents will say that even if he has made a fine Senator, he was sent to the Senate, originally by Boss Pendergast.

have the motor or the landing was dead when you were headed at night for your rendezvous; to be so badly wounded that the chaplain prayed and made motions over you, and you knew somehow that it was the last rites, and you didn't want to die, and decided that you wouldn't; to be forced into a trap at El Guettar, and to be so scared that you had to keep talking every minute or you would have screamed—and an officer can't allow himself to do that.

All this the reader knows and can understand, but it is harder to understand Pvt. Irizzary, who got two medals in North Africa: the D. S. C. for shooting the enemy and the Purple Heart for having the enemy shoot him. He saw action for only 72 hours, and was on his way back home—as quick as that. His account of those 72 hours of almost slapstick heroics is a story to tell and re-tell.

There are other stories, any one of which could have been enlarged to book length, but the expanded story would have lost the punch and poignancy of the brief account.

A Home Study Book on English

The New Home Library's latest book on English, designed for self-teaching is "Grammar, Rhetoric and Composition for Home Study," by Richard D. Mallery, instructor in English, New York University. It is a helpful guide and reference book for those who wish to master both written and spoken English. Besides rules, there are many practice exercises, also essays and short stories to help the reader in composition work.

It seems to me that Mr. Avery of Montgomery Ward has done more for the working men of the United States than any other man in recent years. He has recognized the right of a free citizen of a free country to join or not to join a labor union, as he sees fit. He asserts the right of a free citizen to work without joining a labor union.

What contempt every laboring man and every citizen must have for an administration which has used the Army to take possession of a private plant in an effort to compel that plant to sign a contract which would require as a condition of their employment that the employes retain membership in a union. An administration which goes into court to assert power that, if it existed, would destroy the freedom of every citizen; and which then avoids a decision on the question presented by turning the plant back to its owners.

Negro Soldiers in England

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Recently an article from a British newspaper stated that prejudices are being infiltrated into the minds of the British populace against Negro soldiers stationed there.

This is a direct slap in the face of the Negro soldiers and a complete turn-about from the things we are fighting for. The Negro soldiers in the British Isles are not there as Negroes, but as American soldiers.

A man should be judged according to his merits, regardless of race, creed or color.

WILLIAM ASH.

... a great and integrated system of dams and reservoirs which hold back the water in time of heavy rainfall and which release it when and where it is needed. It has been done by improved agricultural and forestry methods to hold water in the land. It has been done because this system—its planning, its building and its operation—is controlled by one regional, unhampered authority. It understands the valley. It does not have to run to Washington, or beg permission of half a dozen bureaus, to make vital decisions at the precise time they must be made.

Big Region, Big Plan

Under the Tennessee Valley Authority there has been no division of responsibility. There has been no conflict between the Reclamation Bureau and the Engineer Corps; between the people who are interested in power and those interested in flood control or navigation. This is because the Tennessee Valley, unlike the unfortunate Missouri, is one big region and one big river controlled by one big plan. Too many cooks do not stir the Tennessee River broth.

What the contrast and our own experience teach us is this: Never, short of a regional, autonomous, unified authority, can our valley be developed to the full measure of its resources. There must be an end to endless and futile struggle between one interest and another. We need unity, replacing civil war. There is be-section, to the exclusion of those of Kansas, Nebraska and the Dakotas. All along the valley, from the mountains at 13,000 feet to the low plains of the river's mouth, men have given a similar loyalty to the interests of the sections.

Need for Unity

Yet is this not our common problem? Will all our interests be better served—be multiplied—by working together toward a common action? In the past we have splintered our land against each other's shields; blunted our sword to no purpose; divided ourselves into part-camps in which the work of one was to nullify the work of the other.

There must be men up and down our valley who have a vision that transcends the feuds and rivalries of the past. The editors from Missouri to St. Louis have it within their power to promulgate the gospel that the Missouri is one big river: one big problem, to work with the leaders of their communities, and through them, with the people themselves—the people whose destinies shaped by the river as the Nile these thousands of years has shaped the destinies of those who share its valley.

We urge the editors of the Missouri Valley to lift up their eyes, to make stout their hearts. With unity we can conquer the one big problem that the one big river challenges us to solve.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Against Disarmed Forces

To the Editors of the Missouri Valley

One River—One Problem

The time has come to recognize that the Missouri River is one big river presenting one big problem.

It is not one thing in Montana and Wyoming, another thing in the Dakotas and Iowa, a third thing in Nebraska, Kansas and Colorado, and a fourth in Missouri. It is not primarily an instrument to be used for irrigation, or for navigation, or for power, nor is it primarily an evil force to be controlled against its repeated and disastrous flooding. It is a synthesis of all of these. Where is the plan that will solve the one big problem of the one big river?

The Missouri Valley must find that plan. The place to begin is with the newspaper editors up and down the 2470 miles of the valley itself. In this editorial, we address them.

What Editors Are For

We address the editor of the Miles City Star of Montana, the editor of the Bismarck Tribune of North Dakota, the editor of the Pierre Capital Journal of South Dakota, the editors of the Sioux for us, in the Tennessee Valley, an object lesson that sectionalism can give way to unity to greater benefit of all.

These are the essentials of the TVA idea.

1. A Federal autonomous agency, with authority to make decisions within the region.
2. Responsibility to deal with resources as a unified whole, clearly fixed in the regional agency, not divided among several central Federal agencies.
3. A policy fixed by law, that the Federal regional agency work co-operatively with through local and state agencies.

Pick Plan's Shortcomings

Gov. Sharpe of South Dakota might as he did recently in the Christian Science Monitor, Why talk of a new plan when we already have a plan? He offers the Pick Plan as a sovereign cure for all the ills of the river. It has merit. The trouble is that, first of all, it is less a plan than a statement of good intent. It is a rough sketch of flood control and

F-DISPATCH for May 14, 1944

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Because of our peculiar geographical position, Walter Lippmann, in his article of May 8, suggested two separate military establishments for our post-war military policy: the Navy for the Pacific Ocean, the War Department for the Atlantic; each to be treated separately.

A setup of this kind would fortify England's plans of her treaty of 1901, for the United States Navy to guard the Pacific and for the English Navy to protect the Atlantic; but I believe that for our own independence and self-preservation, our Navy must be a two-ocean navy.

Mr. Lippmann also overlooked the dangerous effect such a policy would have on the national unity of the American people. The people living close to the Pacific seaboard would not care to serve in the War Department to help protect the Atlantic. Persons in our Atlantic seaboard states would not relish the idea of serving in the Navy; they would prefer to serve in the War Department to guard the Atlantic.

When an appropriations bill for the Navy was brought before Congress, the Atlantic seaboard states might vote against it. The Pacific Coast people might do the same on a bill for the Army.

Such a policy would split the country in two, the East against the West. An outright division of our armed forces would cause a definite split in our national unity. We need only one armed press and we should leave tactics and strategic details of planning to military specialists.

President Theodore Roosevelt associated the building of the Panama Canal not only for economic reason but he also had in mind a Navy.

IRWIN M. ZUCKERMAN

"Mr. Hannegan

of the Post-Dispatch:

National Chairman Robert Hannegan's speech before the $50,000,000 "palace guard" night was proof that what the party needs most is a Jim in the position of chairman.

Hannegan ridiculed Gov. Dewey because of his "youth," notwithstanding that he, Mr. Hannegan, is a younger man than Dewey. Mr. Hannegan attempted to put across the idea that it is essential to be "old" in years to be able. I should like to illustrate that the history of the world is filled with accomplishments of "young men" who were youthful but great.

Alexander Hamilton was Secretary of the Treasury at the age of 32; Henry Clay was Speaker of the House at 34;

City Journal, the Omaha World-Herald, the Emporia Gazette, the St. Joseph News-Press. We address the editors of the Kansas City Star, the Jefferson City Post-Tribune, and all the other editors up and down the valley.

We address them because finding the plan is a job for all of us, working together; because time is precious if we are to master the river instead of permitting it longer to enslave us. The floods of this spring are the final and convincing proof that we have got to accept the river's challenge now.

We address them because the plan that will rule the river is one that must be chosen and formulated through public education, understanding and popular acceptance. Through such a plan, all dwellers in the long valley can be made neighbors, pulling together in their common task. This is the creative function of journalism. This is what editors are for.

This Spring's Flood

What happened this spring? While lands thirsted in Montana, water that might have made them fertile spilled ruin over the lower valley. They had too little water; we had too much. Water that might have fed the soil, water that might have turned turbines, water that might have been saved to steady the channel for navigation—all this was wasted. In the wasting, a million acres of life-giving land were despoiled. Fine topsoil from Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri was stolen from the farms as the river uselessly pushed its golden burden toward the Gulf of Mexico.

In its wake were homelessness and paralysis and ruin. Whole villages were swallowed by dark water. Transportation stopped. Food production stopped. Unfattened livestock was evacuated to the cities to glut packing houses. The Federal Government had to start the machinery for relief loans to countless farmers whose livelihood, through no fault of their own, had been sacrificed to our neglect of the river.

What would the un-irrigated lands of Montana have given for the water—the same water—that has starved and destroyed so much of the lower valley? What would the river's navigators have given for a system which at once would prevent the hazards of flood navigation and at the same time keep their channels deep and free in all seasons?

irrigation and power. In itself, it is a very start on a unified program of development.

But the irrigation interests seriously to the Pick Plan—notably the provision Rivers and Harbors bill which would set for navigation virtually the entire average annual flow of the Missouri River on the basis of figures for the past 10 years.

In short, the irrigation interests don't like the Pick Plan or the Army Engineers bill. They consider this provision in the Rivers and Harbors bill an attempt to steal their water. At this point Mr. Ickes, interested in reclamation, comes forward with his plan for stealing water from navigation interests for the use of irrigation. President Roosevelt's criticism of the Rivers and Harbors bill last Friday, on the ground that it failed to make proper provision for irrigation, shows once again the failure of failing to consider a river and all its problems as a whole. And thus the conflict proceeds.

There are, therefore, two major objections to the Pick Plan:

The first, that it is impossible politically. Irrigation states won't support it. Obviously any legislation that covers the whole region has to have the whole region's support.

The second, it is defective in an administrative sense. It would have to be administered by the Army Engineer Corps, and the Corps is restricted by act of Congress to navigation flood-control and barred from the field of irrigation.

The Pick Plan, as comprehensively as it attempts to approach our valley problems, actually demonstrates just what is wrong. It, or any plan offered by the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Interior, or partisans of flood-control, the navigation interests or any other single, restricted agency, cannot throw the whole problem out of balance. These problems, all the questions they raise, travel the same old road to the same old goal: Where is the one big plan?

The Missouri's Special Problems

It is not our contention that the TVA plan be transplanted in its entirety to the Missouri Valley. Our river has its special problems as irrigation, which do not even exist on the Tennessee. The nature of the Missouri River is different. The many able and devoted

Two Writers Praise Red Army, But One Fails to be Objective

"Russian Cavalcade," by Albert Parry. (Ives Washburn, New York.)

"The Red Army," by I. Minz. (International Publishers, New York.)

Either or both of these histories of the Soviet Army offer excellent background for an understanding of recent achievements in the Ukraine and Crimea.

Parry begins with the eighteenth century, when Russians first captured Berlin, then ruled over by none other than Frederick the Great of Prussia. Minz discusses the history, growth and organization of the Red Army from the founding of the Soviet Union.

Of the two volumes, that by Parry is far more readable, and has the greater historical value. Minz, corresponding member of the Academy of Sciences of the U. S. S. R., gives many signs of having a weather eye cocked toward Stalinist censorship and censure. He is wholly laudatory—which is wholly unnecessary, for a superb army like the Soviet Union's can take plenty of criticism.

The Father of Waters and his offspring have been on the rampage again and the flood calamity stalked the valley once more. The waters rise, human lives are lost, towns and fields inundated.

And yet all this could be avoided, for these recurring floods can be mastered, once and for all.

Col. Elliott, Division Engineer of the Upper Mississippi Valley Division, has, I believe, the right solution. Speaking recently before a convention of the American Society of Civil Engineers in St. Louis, this veteran of many a flood suggested that it is not possible to control the river by peaceable methods. He thought that success can be assured only by one over-all plan for the control of the entire Mississippi-Missouri River system, and that such a plan should be administered by a sole authority.

Here is a task to fire the imagination, a great and noble postwar project reaching into some 30 of the 48 states.

Let us control the destructive waters. Let us irrigate with them millions of thirsty acres. Let us harness them to generate power. Let us make the lives of millions safe. Let us turn an ever-present menace into an everlasting blessing.

Jobs for Men After the War

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

In his series on "Men and Jobs After the War," Charles G. Ross has stated his own opinion where occasion required, and has elucidated a multiplicity of contemporaneous observations in a manner deserving of acclaim. I suggest St. Louis declare its policy to be "Jobs for men after the war."

The Ward Case and John L. Lewis

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Marquis Childs, in his article of May 4, seems to agree with the Government in its seizure of Montgomery Ward, expelling Sewell Avery. He states that taking over John L. Lewis' office would not have helped the war effort one single bit. How does he know?

John L. Lewis defied the President and the WLB in no uncertain terms. The coal operators, to my knowledge, were agreeable to that decision. Yet the Government took over hundreds of coal mines throughout the country, at great expense to the taxpayers, after vital war production plants were forced to close or reduce production. Wouldn't it have been more sensible to seize the United Mine Workers headquarters and issue orders from that one office than from the hundreds of coal mines?

Now why didn't the President's authority, as outlined by Attorney General Biddle, in the Montgomery Ward-Sewell Avery case, apply to John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers?

president of the University of Southern California and chancellor of the Institute of World Affairs and of the Los Angeles University of International Relations.

Our Asiatic exclusion discriminates against the people of Afghanistan, Burma, India, Indo-China, Japan, Korea, Malaya, Netherlands Indies, Philippines and Thailand. No proposal has been made, or is likely to be made, which would permit sizable—or indeed more than token—immigration from these countries. But blanket exclusion of races represents an undemocratic philosophy which is now dangerous as well, for it stands in the way of the international understandings on which we hope to build a peace. Have we ourselves the understanding to make this start?

Needed: An Explanation

By delaying action on a new contract for maintenance of the city's street lights, the Public Utilities Committee of the Board of Aldermen has put itself in a position calling for explanation.

An earlier three-year contract under which the city paid about $16,500 a month expired last Dec. 12. More than three months later, the firm which had held that contract and which was continuing to perform the service under temporary 90-day extensions was sold for $150,000. The firm's principal asset at that time was the city job, continuance of which was uncertain because a bill had been introduced to authorize the letting of a new contract by competitive bidding.

No good reason has been given in public statements by Chairman Gus A. Hartkopf as to why action on the new contract has been held up.

It cannot escape notice that failure to act on the bill for a new contract means the job remains in the hands of the present contractor. It is obvious that the contracting firm must retain the business for a considerable period, either under extension of the old contract or under a new contract in order to justify the new owners in their purchase of the business at the price they paid.

On the other hand, the city has the alternative of doing the maintenance job itself or letting a new contract.

Whatever is done, it should be done after the fullest publicity, which might very well include a hearing at which all pertinent facts would be presented. This is no time for shifty action by an aldermanic committee.

Another provision permits counties to cooperate in certain facilities. Smaller units go together to buy and operate road-building machinery, to build and maintain a jail or a hospital. This would eliminate a great deal of duplication, and mean real economy for taxpayer.

It is also planned to authorize mergers of adjacent counties, by separate majority vote of county. Another provision would permit a county government to be dissolved by two-thirds vote to permit part or all of the county to be annexed to a neighbor.

These various possibilities should be sufficient to achieve the major objectives of outright consolidation, without the antagonisms which often toward mergers would arouse.

The Issue in the Poll Tax Vote

The impending vote in the Senate today is not on the poll tax issue but purely and simply on whether or not the Senate should be allowed to express itself on the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting.

The vote will decide the fate of a petition spearheaded by Majority Leader Barkley of Kentucky and Senator Mead of New York—to debate to 96 hours. The petition's purpose is to break the filibuster which has been holding the Senate since last Thursday and to settle the issue in the manner of freemen—by voting.

What is the opposition's objection to so reasonable a proposition? Senator Bilbo of Mississippi, one of the most unreasonable antagonists of the anti-poll tax bill, stated the only objection in his address to the Mississippi Legislature last spring:

The majority of the men coming back from the services will return unimpaired physically. What are some of the physical disabilities which we must be prepared to meet?

First, disfigurements and deformities of all kinds. There will be the problem of individuals so disfigured they cannot return to their former jobs. For instance, a salesman with a part of his jaw shot away will be unable to make satisfactory contacts with the public.

What are some of the obstacles and difficulties in re-employing disabled veterans?

In the first place, there will be some so severely disfigured and disabled they cannot be taken in. Some cases will not adapt themselves to the routine of industry.
Some will adapt poorly to noise, repetitive operations, production incentive methods, the length of the work day, swing shifts.
In short, they do not belong in the factory.

"This Is It," by Harry Davis. Vanguard Press, New York.)

In his very new book, Harry Davis has assembled the stories of 12 soldiers, a representative group chosen at random from all branches of the service. Davis lets them tell their own stories. Regardless of the necessary editing, the reader senses the change in tempo and personality as he moves from one account to another. Davis had a purpose behind the collection. He wanted America to know how much it had demanded of its youth and how miraculously those demands had been fulfilled.

Davis writes by way of preface: "In this book are the quiet voices of this new and somewhat awesome breed of fighting men, telling what they saw and felt as they met the shock of war." No two men reacted to the tragedy of war in the same way; no two had exactly the same experience.

By Alvin H. Goldstein

A Staff Correspondent
of the Post-Dispatch

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.

THE well-dressed Japanese strolling up Madison avenue in New York hesitated before a store, seemingly fascinated by the attractive window display. Suddenly, with a quick glance to right and left, he darted through the door and made his way rapidly to the rear of the store. After a few whispered words, he handed a small, compact bundle to the proprietor and bowed deeply.

"I may not be able to come again," he said. The proprietor replied that they might meet again, perhaps in Honolulu. "No, No!" the Japanese exclaimed. "Not Honolulu."

The scene of this undramatic episode was a doll and toy store, catering to discriminating and affluent customers; the characters were the proprietor, a well-born and cultured woman, distinguished among doll fanciers, and a Japanese naval officer engaged in espionage and bearing $25,000 to buy black treachery; the time was Nov. 26, 1941. Eleven days later Pearl Harbor was in flames.

From the records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation comes the bizarre account of the inquiry that will go down in the annals of espionage as "The Strange Case of the Talking Dolls"—dolls that were maneuvered by sinister hands to betray the military secrets of a wounded nation, puppets that obeyed treacherous commands to talk to the enemy. These dolls spoke the language of treason.

Special agents of the F. B. I. first became aware of the Jap-plant serpent's nest when they received for inspection a letter bearing an address to Buenos Aires, Argentina. The letter had not been delivered in Buenos Aires and had been returned to the sender, noted on the back of the envelope as a woman in Portland, Ore. Scrutiny quickly disclosed the communication was intended as a secret message. Certain misspelling appeared purposeful; the context was garbled although it was devoted to an innocent discussion of dolls.

The letter, written Feb. 1, 1942, was carefully typed. It was signed with the name of the Portland woman. The writer described a remarkable "doll hospital" where she had been able to leave "three old English dolls for repair." It

To the cipher experts in the counter espionage section of the bureau of Investigation, apparently harmless phrases assumed dangerous proportions. In constant communication with Naval Intelligence, they well knew that the "three English dolls" referred to warships tied up for repairs at a West Coast port; that the shipping of doll parts was a warning that other craft were being repaired elsewhere; that "fishing nets" meant submarine nets protecting the harbor, and that "balloons" represented other coastal defense installations.

A phrase in the message asserting that the men at the doll hospital worked "day and night on orders" was interpreted, with little need for ingenuity, to mean that the shipyard was making progress in the emergency and also that it was fair game for bombers at any hour of the 24. F. B. I. investigators promptly launched a nation-wide search for a dangerous and well-informed spy—a spy who played a hazardous game with dolls.

Investigation disclosed that the Portland woman whose name was signed to the letter was above suspicion, a conclusion confirmed when comparison of the signature and her proved handwriting was undertaken by F. B. I. experts. The doll letter signature was a clever forgery, so perfect that it led the Portland woman, when interviewed, to concede that it appeared to be her own. She, however, was a doll collector, and supplied the names of many people she knew who also indulged in the hobby. The grim game of hide-and-seek, involving lives and national security, was under way in earnest.

THE identity of the Japanese "doll spy" was still a threatening secret when a Springfield (O.) woman received an envelope bearing her name and return address. Like the other, it had been undelivered in Buenos Aires by the Argentina mail service. When she read the contents of the strange envelope, she quickly visited the postmaster. He summoned the F. B. I. The Ohio woman, whose name was accurately forged to the missive, was puzzled at several correct references to her personal life, but of chief interest to the F. B. I. was the realization that the "talking dolls" were spilling true naval secrets again.

Dated March 1, 1942, this letter was postmarked at New York

Ill., but would be back to work soon.

At the time, the destroyer Shaw was nearing the end of repairs of damages received at Pearl Harbor and was about to rejoin the fleet. It was thought that the other descriptive terms referred in more detail to the three warships mentioned in the previous letter, the words being part of a pre-determined code. A postscript stated that a trip to Louisville had been canceled. Circumstances made it clear to the investigators that this information concerned the cruiser Louisville. At any rate, it is a matter of record that there were three important ships of war in port at San Francisco for repairs and refitting shortly before the date of this letter.

With the Ohio clue, the day of identity of the manipulator of the "talking dolls" drew nearer. As had the Oregon woman whose mysterious letter first reached the F. B. I., she listed among her acquaintances interested in dolls, Mrs. Velvalee Dickinson, widely known as a doll collector and dealer, whose New York shop at 718 Madison avenue was famous among collectors throughout the United States. F. B. I. agents secured specimens of Mrs. Dickinson's typewritten correspondence, but it did not correspond with the two spy messages to Argentina, both written on the same machine.

Painstaking inquiry disclosed, however, that she and her husband, Lee Taylor Dickinson, had been in reduced circumstances, due partly to his ill health, until late in 1941, when they began to show signs of prosperity. Mrs. Dickinson, nee Blucher, had been born in California, in 1893, of American-born parents, attended high school and college there, holding an A. B. from Stanford University. An excellent business woman, she had handled accounts for a brokerage firm, where she specialized in Japanese customers.

Her husband had been employed by a produce association with many Japanese members. They moved to New York in 1937 and later Mrs. Dickinson founded the doll business, becoming celebrated in the trade.

While this phase of the investigation continued, letters multiplied in the hands of the F. B. I. A note dated Jan. 27, 1942, undelivered at Buenos Aires, had been mailed at Seattle, Wash., but was returned according to direction on the envelope to a widow at she had not written down her personal activities and how dolls, her hobby.

The letter set forth that she had received a "German bisque doll dressed in a hula grass skirt" that it had been broken and taken to Seattle for repairs but the damages would be mended by the first week in February. The significance of the message was frighteningly evident when the F. B. I. determined that one of the battleships damaged at Pearl Harbor actually was in Puget Sound Navy Yard for repair when this letter was mailed from Seattle. The "German doll in a hula grass skirt" was "talking" about a damaged warship being fitted for new service.

* * *

A SECOND letter turned up in the hands of the Portland woman, who again quickly notified F. B. I. agents. Mailed at Portland, May 28, 1942, it told of a doll collection with one doll torn in the middle, but "it has been repaired and I like it very much."

It referred to a "lovely Siamese temple dancer," for which it was impossible to get a mate "so I am redressing just a small, plain, ordinary doll into a second Siam doll." The F. B. I. was in a position to learn that the "Siam doll" was an American vessel and that the part about a mate referred to the conversion of another type of warship to similar use. A vessel hit amidship was the doll "torn in the middle." There was a reference to French dolls. Some vessels of the French fleet were in American ports at the time.

The last spy note to reach the F. B. I. came from a woman at Colorado Springs, Colo., whose name was on the back of a letter mailed to the Buenos Aires address from Oakland, Cal., June 3, 1942. This communication told of the purchase of "seven small Chinese dolls" which she would make to look as if they were "seven real Chinese dolls," and that the family would consist of a father, grandfather, grandmother, mother and three children. Just before this letter was written, seven warships came into San Francisco Bay for repairs and changes! The code identified them and described the alterations, a matter still a military secret.

By the time these messages were intercepted, the F. B. I. had closed in on Mrs. Dickinson. Although Mrs. Dickinson was unaware that they knew she was the voice of the talking dolls, her every move had been traced and and used the typewriter on which the first letter was written Jan. 27; they learned that among their friends were good American citizens who were indiscreet enough to confide their secrets.

Letter No. 2 was written on a typewriter they rented at a San Francisco hotel; soon the machines used to write the other missives were discovered and in each instance the Dickinsons had access to the typewriter. The F. B. I. investigators learned of financial difficulties experienced by the Dickinsons until late in 1941, and found that shortly after Dickinson's death in 1943, Mrs. Dickinson offered $15,000 for an interest in a Seattle hotel. For a considerable interval she had been paying obligations with $100 Federal Reserve Bank notes. Some of these notes, inquiry developed, were in the hands of Japanese agents before Pearl Harbor.

When she was arrested last January as she was preparing to open her safe deposit box, a search disclosed nearly $16,000 in the vault, much of it traced to Japanese sources. At her home were complete outfits of Japanese clothing, collections of Japanese phonograph records, an address book with the names of Japanese residents, Japanese jewelry, silver and literature.

At first, the unattractive 50-year-old woman denied all knowledge of espionage. She fought, kicked and scratched her captors. The money, she said, had been concealed in her husband's bed and she had found it in a search after his death before his body was removed.

Early in the questioning she denied knowing its source but later, between tirades, she asserted that her husband was a spy for the Japanese. She insisted she had not wittingly assisted in the nefarious scheme but admitted she wrote the baby doll code letters at his dictation.

* * *

SHE admitted having frequently met the Japanese naval officer at her doll shop and recalled his payment of $25,000 on the eve of Pearl Harbor for the despicable services she said were to be performed by her husband, who then was near death with a heart ailment. But she stoutly denied in the face of contradictory evidence that she had manipulated her dolls to betray her country to the enemy.

The end came when she appeared Aug. 14 before United States government could disclose the facts without naming the effort. You sold out to the Japs without thinking of the lives of American boys. I believe you have been given more consideration than you were entitled to and you are lucky to escape the death penalty."

Thus the book was closed on a dark incident of treason, and so ends the strange tale of the talking dolls, the voice of their treacherous mistress silenced until it can do no harm.

Objective of the Nazi Spies

The FBI has done a fine piece of work in capturing the two Nazi spies landed on the Maine coast Nov. 29 by a submarine. While we're praising this exploit, and condemning the native American exposed as an enemy agent, we shouldn't overlook one point about the capture: the fact that these two spies hoped to gather valuable information by listening to conversations of service men and civilians.

It's still true that loose talk is dangerous.

Dear W.W.:

I am returning this to you for further explanation.

Al Goldstein of the N.Y. Bureau of the St. Louis Post Dispatch is the guy who wrote the letter. He called me up last Friday saying in effect that he had sent you a letter the night before, which he regretted; had had a beer too many, was sorry, etc. Would I please tear up the letter and return the $5. I told him the letter hadn't come in yet, but that I'd return the letter and keep the five bucks. He's the guy who once interviewed you for a story for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. I don't know anything about other nasty notes.

Anyway, the letter came in Saturday and Kay, not knowing of the phone call, sent the letter on to you.

Washington, D.C.....

The immortal Younger Generation that inspired J. Scott Fitzgerald's "This Side of Paradise" and animated the pen of John Galsworthy is about to be outdone. After almost a quarter of a century a younger generation that promises to be wilder and woolier is bidding for the laurels of its predecessor of the smoking, racketeering twenties.

This is Immortal Younger Generation of the Prohibition Era was barred in the sermons and feathered in the public prints of the time as amoral hoodlums. They drank ~~knicker~~ bathtub gin; they reeked in rumble seats; they swore and left their overcoats unbuttoned; they shingled their hair and wore skirts above their knees; they danced, successively, the shimmy, the toddle and the Black Bottom; they wore boyish form brassieres and left off their corsets; they smoked too much and lulled their brains to sleep to the delirious saxophony of mated trombones.

Now after a quarter of a century a younger generation has appeared upon the scene that promises to make these gin-drinking, corsetless ruckers, look, in comparison, like prize-winning pupils at a Sunday-school taffy pull. Off to a fast start, this younger generation already has Federal Bureau Investigation Director J. Edgar Hoover handing out warnings ~~out~~ about juvenile delinquency and U.S. Attorney General Tom C. Clark sounding an alarm about the great upsurge in teen-age criminality and proposing a new system for handling juvenile law violators.

Analysing an estimated 1,393,644 major crimes committed during the year 1944, crime-expert Hoover recently was almost jolted out of his swivel chair. The figures proved that the ~~part~~ youth of America is on its way to the dogs on a greased slide.

"A comparison of the arrest records for 1944 with the last peacetime year of 1941 indicated that arrests for boys under 18 years of age increased 13.8 percent, while arrests for girls in the same age bracket jumped 117.8 percent," ~~Essex~~ Hoover explains. "If these youngsters continue along the path of degeneration as they reach maturity, it is not difficult to imagine the colossal task which will confront society and the police. It is unfortunate that the crimes for which these youngsters are arrested do not fall into the class of mischievousness. In 1944, 40.1 percent of all persons arrested for robbery, burglary, larceny, auto theft, embezzlement, fraud, forgery, counterfeiting, receiving stolen property and arson were under twenty-one years of age."

Hoover, U.S. Atty. Gen. Clark, and Federal agencies with responsibility in the field of juvenile delinquency, gasped their loudest when they got down to examining the figures on teenage girls. They compared the 1944 figures with the year 1941 and found a 174 percent increase in arrests for drunkenness and driving at will intoxicated and the astounding increase of 177 percent in arrests of girls under eighteen for prostitution and lewdness.

Hoover, Federal Bureau Investigation Director Hoover realizes that these figures do not make pleasant reading, but he points out that Holmes, according to the Bureau, is a "bad" criminal delinquent. The Bureau further is going to take the figures and crime wave in history. From the present situation, a girl is arrested for prostitution and vagrancy will come the future gun molls, the women models of other smoking society partners running loose of Clyde Barker and of the Lady in Red, outlaw doll of the mad Jack Billinger. And from the late under 18 arrested for rape and robbery, largely from the theft will come the future Kate Schatzman, Alvin Karpis, Ralph Bachalters and Al Capone.

"The big gangsters of the period after the last war were not WWI war veterans," Hoover pointed out. "And the gangsters of the next generation will be drawn from our own present day juvenile delinquents rather than from the returning war veterans. It happened that way once before when Jack Billinger, Alvin Karpis, Fred and Arthur Barker, Pretty Boy Floyd and a score of other young hoodlums of the late twenties and early thirties, all too young to serve during the first World War, grew into maturity and caused a crime wave, the like of which was never previously experienced in the United States."

Figures for the present year available at the F.B.I. here in Washington would seem to indicate that the Hoover-predicted crime wave, if not off to a good start, is at least festering in a good culture. ^{The} ~~The~~ first nine months of this year showed an increase of 19.5 percent over 1944 when law enforcement agencies faced a new and serious crime every 23 seconds. And the semiannual bulletin of Uniform ~~Crime~~ ^{Crime} Reports compiled by the F.B.I. reveals that approximately 70 percent of all adult criminals were juvenile delinquents; that 58,041 persons arrested and fingerprinted during the first six months of this year were under 21 years of age; that 13,133 of these were boys and girls in the 17-year age group and that the greatest increase in arrests of boys under 21 was noted in offenses of criminal homicide, rape and other felonious assaults. Arrests such as these showed an increase of 25 percent during the first half of 1945 as compared with the same period in 1944.

"Every day reports come to my desk telling the sad story of misguided youths who have run athwart the law," Hoover points out. "One case involved two boys, ages fourteen and sixteen respectively and a fourteen-year old girl. It seems the boys, who lived in a large Eastern city, stole an automobile and drove it into the next state where they abandoned it the following day. They immediately stole another car and returned to their home city where they met their young girl companion. She joined them in a ride, and the following day they again drove to another state where the second automobile was abandoned. One day later the boys stole another automobile and again met their young girl friend where they took for another ride. The trio was found sleeping in the car by members of a local police department early in the morning. Upon questioning, the sixteen year old lad readily admitted his theft of approximately sixteen automobiles. He said he was uncertain of the exact number, but knew that since he had stolen had been taken at least two months. He had been accompanied in all these crimes by his thirteen year old boy friend and their girl friend. All three defendants were sentenced to serve indeterminate terms. The older boy went to a state correctional institution and the other two to a state training school. The girl was placed in a reformatory for the purpose of reformation."

In the future, Hoover said, it is hoped that more and more of these young people will be given the opportunity to lead a normal life.

...to make the gangsters of the future. To prove
...the breeding place of potential postwar
...not among our boys who fought this war but in
...the tender years. However still after the case of ...teen-year-old boy who went into a small liquor store in
...city and ordered a pint of whiskey.

...to show his Selective Service card
...set a .32 caliber revolver and ordered the
...the contents of the cash register in a paper
...over the counter." Hoover recounts the story.
...left the store, taking with him $84.

...later the same lad entered a tailor shop with
...the proprietor did not

...shot from the weapon he carried. Continuing

...another robbery

...attempt.

...a thorough
...and

...robbery, found
...was sentenced to

...cases of juvenile
...of the country.

...Federal men, composed
...All had passed

...the case.

To combat juvenile delinquency and save this country from an unparalleled crime wave, Hoover suggests: that the parents of America learn the meaning of home discipline; training for parents; creation of a separate juvenile bureau in police departments; appropriate religious training and assistance in churches; adequate sex supervision in institutions for boys and girls; supervised recreation in schools after school hours; and closer ^{relationships} between teachers and parents.

And to those who accuse him of yelling "wolf" and screaming too loudly about a generation that is only suffering growing pains instead of going headlong to the dogs, he points to these concrete facts: Last year 34.3 percent of all robberies were committed by boys and girls under 21; 51.8 percent of all burglaries were committed by boys and girls too young to vote; and 63.1 percent of all automobile accidents in the United States were committed by kids or an age who should be legally liable to a spanking.

~~Delinquency is a national problem and it is not a problem of the future. It is a problem of the present and it is a problem of the past.~~

"Unless," says crime expert Hoover, "we take a hard look at murders, bank robberies, rape, arson, kidnapping and theft, we'd better get busy."

It looks like the only way to keep kids out of trouble is to keep them out of trouble. Hoover says that today they're not just not being taught right and wrong, they're not being taught how to get along with their parents and how to get along with their neighbors. He says that the only way to keep kids out of trouble is to keep them out of trouble. He says that the only way to keep kids out of trouble is to keep them out of trouble.

Songbirds Arrive In Search for Food

By Leonard Hall

THIS morning at breakfast we sat and watched a downy woodpecker do acrobatics in the ash tree beside the window. Between visits to the peanut butter, he'd land on a small twig and do loop-the-loops! Cooler weather has brought the song birds to the feeders in earnest and has caught us without all of our winter's feeding preparations made. So far we'd just been putting out scratch feed and a bit of peanut butter in one feeder. Now we must get out the suet feeders and the hanging log which is bored full of holes for chopped raisins and peanut butter. It is obvious that at least some of the birds are old-timers, since we find them searching for food in certain spots where feeders hung last year. This morning we saw a junco with an irregularly shaped white spot on its

Korean Race Track

By Keith Wheeler

A Special Correspondent
of the Post-Dispatch

SEOUL, Korea, Dec. 1

CORP. DONALD AGRELLA, who as a Chicago reporter used to make occasional neighborly contributions to the support of a man named Sam who kept a book around the corner, is authority for the following data on the Korean horse-racing situation.

The horse park is an extremely rough half-mile sod oval just outside the city's medieval east gate. There is a grand stand of sorts which Don says somewhat resembles Churchill Downs.

Throughout most of the autumn there have been races three times a week, but today a slant-eyed man in a loud checked suit kept yelling something which sounded like "no" and so maybe the fall meeting is finished.

Anyhow there were no horses around and, only a few loafers drownded in the sun on the grandstand's concrete tiers.

When he visited the track last on a Saturday three weeks ago, Don said the place was filled year. This morning we saw a junco with an irregularly shaped white spot on its throat and are certain it's one which spent last winter with us. Now we're wondering about "Dorothy the Downy," a plucky little female woodpecker, with only one foot which practically lived at the feeder last winter.

We counted seven species at one time this morning which, while it is not at all unusual, is the most we've had at any one time this fall at Possum Trot Farm. There were a half-dozen tufted titmice, several chickadees, the male downy woodpecker, a dozen juncos, two pairs of cardinals and the red-bellied woodpecker with his neat salt and pepper suit and orange-red cap. Last year it took weeks to get him up to the feeding trays close to the house, but this season he's made himself right at home from the very beginning.

Down in the black-haw tree, the mocking bird sat disconsolately, looking as though he wished he'd gone south with the first cold day. He isn't at all the cheery fellow that we've known all summer, but we'll do our best by putting out apples and raisins for him. As we sat over our second cup of coffee, a Cooper's hawk came sailing over, quite low, as though he'd been attracted by the unusual activity of so many small birds around our windows. The song birds paid no attention to him, but down in the chicken yard the hens ran for cover.

● DESPITE THE CHORES which Mama had lined up for me to do and the fact that our valley is almost totally devoid of quail this season due to the June floods, Randy and I braved the gusty winds to make a two-hour round of the fields on Thanksgiving day. We went up over the hill and through Herb's orchard, where the boys have set box traps for rabbits, then down through the woods into the next valley and up along the river. Some of the fields here were in corn and some had lain fallow and it's as likely looking territory as you'd want to see. Randy hunted as hard and merrily as if there had been plenty of game and I hiked along at a fast rate, smoking my pipe to keep my nose from freezing. We made a wide swing up the river and then back up our creek valley where there is wonderful feed and cover. Now and then I kicked a rabbit out of his bed and there were plenty of juncos and field sparrows which had a difficult time holding their course against the high wind. But no quail. I've wondered, sometimes, whether it isn't hard on a bird dog's morale to spend several hours afield where there are no birds, but such does not seem to be the case.

● WE WERE SOMEWHAT WORRIED when we brought Randy home from Alvin's, over on the Illinois prairie, that the big fellow might go too wide for the rough, hilly country where we do most of our hunting. To our delight, he just naturally "hunts to the gun," swinging well out when he hits a big open field and then moving in close when the cover is heavy. We came in, at last, and I made the season's first hot toddy before settling down to get the chores done. There was wood to be brought down for the fireplace, a new glass-topped bird feeder to be set up in front of the big window and even the matter of lending a hand at stuffing the turkey which was soon turning a beautiful golden brown in the oven. Our guests caught us, in fact, while these chores were still under way but we didn't mind, for they were mostly family.

There were things to be thankful for—and things to be sad about—and we wondered what young Fred was having for dinner, somewhere out in the China Sea. We sat beside the fire and Tom and I argued the chances of the human race doing away with national sovereignty and forming a world state wherein men could live at peace—and doing this before the race had destroyed itself. The chances, as we sat there talking, did not seem too good!

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 1.

THE immortal Younger Generation that inspired F. Scott Fitzgerald's "This Side of Paradise" and animated the pen of John Held is about to be outdone. After almost a quarter of a century, a younger generation that promises to be wilder and woollier is bidding for the laurels of its predecessor of the roaring, racketeering twenties.

The Younger Generation of the Prohibition Era was tarred in the sermons and feathered in the public prints of the time as amoral hoodlums. They drank bathtub gin; they necked in rumble seats; they swore and left their overshoes unbuckled; they shingled their hair and wore skirts above their knees; they danced, successively, the shimmy, the toddle and the Black Bottom; they wore boyish form brassieres and left off their corsets; they smoked too much and lulled their brains to sleep to the delirious saxophony of muted trombones.

Now a younger generation has appeared upon the scene that promises to make these gin-drinking, corsetless neckers, look, in comparison, like prize-winning pupils at a Sunday School taffy pull. Off to a fast start, this younger generation already has Federal Bureau Investigation Director J. Edgar Hoover handing out warnings about juvenile delinquency and United States Attorney General Tom C. Clark sounding an alarm about the great upsurge in teen-age criminality and proposing a new system for handling juvenile law violators.

Analyzing an estimated 1,393,644 major crimes committed during the year 1944, crime-expert Hoover recently was almost jolted out of his swivel chair. The figures proved that a part of the youth of America is on its way to the dogs on a greased slide.

"A comparison of the arrest records for 1944 with the last peacetime year of 1941 shows that arrests for boys under 18 years of age increased 18.8 per cent, while arrests for girls in the same age bracket jumped 117.8 per cent," Hoover explains.

"If these youngsters continue along the path of degradation as they reach maturity, it is not difficult to imagine the colossal task which will confront society and the police. It is unfortunate that the crimes for which these youngsters are arrested do not fall into the class of mischievousness. Last years, 40.1 per cent of all persons arrested for robbery, burglary, larceny, auto theft, embezzlement, fraud, forgery, counterfeiting, receiving stolen property and arson were under 21 years of age."

Hoover, U.S. Atty. Gen. Clark, and Federal agencies with responsibility in the field of juvenile delinquency, gasped their loudest when they got down to examining the figures on teen-age girls. They compared the 1944 figures with the year 1939 and found a 174 per cent increase in arrests for drunkenness and driving while intoxicated and the astounding increase of 357 per cent in arrests of girls under eighteen for prostitution and sex offenses.

Hoover realizes that these figures do not make pleasant reading, but he points out that unless something is done at once to combat juvenile delinquency, the United States is going to face its biggest crime wave in history. From the teen-age girls arrested for drunkenness and vagrancy will come the future gun molls; the newer models of cigar-smoking Bonnie Parker, running mate, of Clyde Barrow, and of the Lady in Red, outlaw doll of the mad John Dillinger.

AND from the lads under 18 arrested for rape and robbery, larceny and auto theft will come the future Dutch Schultzes, Alvin Karpises and Al Capones.

"The big gangsters of the period after the last war were not war veterans," Hoover said. "And the gangsters of the next generation will be drawn from our own present day juvenile delinquents rather than from the returning war veterans. It happened that way once before when John Dillinger, Alvin Karpis, Fred and Arthur Barker, Pretty Boy Floyd and a score of other hoodlums of the late twenties and early thirties, all too young to serve during the first World War, grew into maturity and caused a crime wave, the like of which was never pre-crease in arrests of boys under 21 was noted in offenses of criminal homicide, rape and other felonious assaults. Arrests such as these showed an increase of 25 per cent during the first half of 1945 as compared with the same period in 1944.

"Every day reports come to my desk telling the sad story of misguided youths who have run athwart the law," Hoover said. "One case involved two boys, aged 14 and 16, respectively, and a 14-year-old girl. It seems the boys, who lived in a large Eastern city, stole an automobile and drove it into the next state where they abandoned it the following day. They immediately stole another car and returned to their home city where they met their young girl companion.

"She joined them in a ride, and the following day they again drove to another state, where the second automobile was abandoned. One day later the boys stole another automobile and again met their young girl friend whom they took for another ride.

"The trio was found sleeping in the car by members of a local police department early in the morning. Upon questioning, the 16-year-old lad readily admitted the theft of approximately 16 automobiles. He said he was uncertain of the exact number, but knew that those he had stolen had been taken within two months. He had been accompanied in most of these crimes by his 14-year-old boy friend and their 'girl.' Both boys were sentenced to serve indeterminate terms, the older one at a state correctional institution and the younger in a state training school. The girl was placed on indefinite probation in the custody of relatives."

In the files of the F.B.I. are plenty of records to prove that there are many juvenile delinquents growing up with the warped ideas it takes to make the left, however, the boy fired a shot from the weapon he carried.

"Continuing his round of hold-ups, this same boy attempted another robbery the following morning when, wearing a handkerchief about his face, he entered a local saloon. This hold-up was also thwarted when a customer threw an empty beer glass at the young bandit. He fired again, but his aim, fortunately, was bad. Within a very short while this same youth carried out a fourth hold-up attempt. This one succeeded to the extent of $5.

"A thorough investigation revealed his identity and as a result he was brought to trial and charged with robbery, grand larceny and carrying firearms. He was sentenced to serve a total of 20 to 40 years in prison."

ALSO in the records of the F.B.I. are cases of juvenile gangs operating on a large scale in various parts of the country. In one Southern city, the F.B.I. found a very "salacious" case points to immorality among grown-ups and the passing of the good old American home; bemoans lax home discipline and failure to treat properly cases of maladjustment.

HE also points to unwholesome employment of juveniles, burlesque shows and salacious literature; understaffed juvenile courts and neglected detention homes. He blames the housing shortage and poorly trained personnel in community governments.

"We've got to remember that the kids of today are a lot smarter than 20 years ago," he said, recalling the comparative pink-tea scare thrown into the nation by the juveniles of the first Jazz Age. "And remember that any kid can go out today and make more money than his father made 20 years ago.

"They're not conditioned for this prosperity. They've learned to buy their entertainment but not how to keep up with their expenses. Honky tonks flourish as never before and the first thing you know a kid's appetite for entertainment has outgrown his earning power and he sticks up a store to keep money in his pants pocket."

To combat juvenile delinquency and save this country from an unparalleled crime wave, Hoover suggests:

That the parents of America learn the meaning of home discipline.

Training for parents. Creation of separate juvenile bureaus in police departments.

Appropriate religious training and assistance in churches.

Adequate sex supervision in institutions for boys and girls.

Supervised recreation in schools after school hours.

Closer relationship between teachers and parents.

And to those who accuse him of yelling "wolf" and screaming too loudly about a generation that is only suffering growing pains instead of going headlong to the dogs, he points to these concrete facts: Last year 34.5 per cent of all robberies were committed by

When he visited the track last on a Saturday three weeks ago, Don said the place was filled with both people and horses. He said the crowd must have run to 5000 people, both men and women. As far as he could tell, everybody bet the horses on every race and everybody, even beggars in rags, appeared to have their pockets full of money.

DON PICKED HIS first horse on appearance out of the pre-race parade around the paddock.

He said he chose the only beast that looked as though he might make it to the barrier out of the saddest lot of platers and plow horses he has ever seen.

He played the plug on the nose because he discovered, upon fighting his way through the mob around the ticket windows, that that is the only way you can bet on a Korean horse race.

There is no such thing as place or show in Korea.

Betting tickets are 20 yen each, about $1.33. They are printed on tissue paper and punched with the number of the horse and race.

BEFORE EACH of the day's ten races, Don said, the starter and judges all piled into a surrey drawn by a refugee from a milk wagon and trotted once around the oval.

He said he couldn't figure out this bit of swank or convention unless they were inspecting the track for the carcasses of animals dead of old age in the previous race.

Don received a further shock when the horses filed tiredly onto the track, for they lined up behind the barrier in what would have been the stretch turn on an American track. His suspicions were confirmed when the barrier went up. In Korea the horses run the wrong way.

He said he considered the riding manners of Korean jockeys very polite and gentlemanly, although poorly contrived for winning a race. They ride wide on the turns and never bunch up and seldom use the whip.

The jockeys generally sported lurid silks, but otherwise bore little resemblance to American riders. They were generally heavy men and he thought two fellow that we've known all summer, but we'll do our best by putting out apples and raisins for him. As we sat over our second cup of coffee, a Cooper's hawk came sailing over, quite low, as though he'd been attracted by the unusual activity of so many small birds around our windows. The song birds paid no attention to him, but down in the chicken yard the hens ran for cover.

● DESPITE THE CHORES which Mama had lined up for me to do and the fact that our valley is almost totally devoid of quail this season due to the June floods, Randy and I braved the gusty winds to make a two-hour round of the fields on Thanksgiving day. We went up over the hill and through Herb's orchard where the boys have set box traps for rabbits, then down through the woods into the next valley and up along the river. Some of the fields here were in corn and some had lain fallow and it's as likely looking territory as you'd want to see. Randy hunted as hard and mercily as if there had been plenty of game and I hiked along at a fast rate, smoking my pipe to keep my nose from freezing. We made a wide swing up the river and then back up our creek valley where there is wonderful feed and cover. Now and then I kicked a rabbit out of his bed and there were plenty of juncos and field sparrows which had a difficult time holding their course against the high wind. But no quail. I've wondered, sometimes, whether it isn't hard on a bird dog's morale to spend several hours afield where there are no birds, but such does not seem to be the case.

● WE WERE SOMEWHAT WORRIED when we brought Randy home from Alvin's, over on the Illinois prairie, that the big fellow might go too wide for the rough, hilly country where we do most of our hunting. To our delight, he just naturally "hunked to the gun," swinging well out when he hits a big open field and then moving in close when the cover is heavy. We came in, at last, and I made the season's first hot toddy before settling down to get the chores done. There was wood to be brought down for the fireplace, a new glass-topped bird feeder to be set up in front of the big window and even the matter of lending a hand at stuffing the turkey which was soon turning a beautiful golden brown in the oven. Our guests caught us, in fact, while these chores were still under way but we didn't mind, for they were mostly family.

There were things to be thankful for—and things to be sad about—and we wondered what young Fred was having for dinner, somewhere out in the China Sea. We sat beside the fire and Tom and I argued the chances of the human race doing away with national sovereignty and forming a world state wherein men could live at peace—and doing this before the race had destroyed itself. The chances, as we sat there talking, did not seem too good!

● ONE THING MAMA AND I DECIDED we had to be thankful for is George and Gerti, without whose help we'd never have gotten Possum Trot battened down for the winter. There's the matter of a new wing on the chicken house which George built. It gives the hens a perfectly sheltered yet bright and sunny scratching pen for winter days. Already the egg production has started to climb. Then we found that Randy and Chipper, working as a team, always managed to burrow their way out of the dog pen. George ended that by nailing saplings securely around the inside of the pen at the bottom and nailing the wire fast to these. The winter rye is planted in the garden and that young cedar tree has been moved from the road down to the edge of the woods and the jonquil bulbs which I brought home have been planted. And when we stay in town to make a speech, which is far too often, the livestock is fed and tucked safely in for the night. In fact, living in the country without neighbors like George and Gerti would be pretty hard to manage.

their hair and wore skirts above their knees; they danced, successively, the shimmy, the toddle and the Black Bottom; they wore boyish form brassieres and left off their corsets; they smoked too much and lulled their brains to sleep to the delicious saxophony of muted trombones.

Now a younger generation has appeared upon the scene that promises to make these gin-drinking, corsetless neckers, look, in comparison, like prize-winning pupils at a Sunday School taffy pull. Off to a fast start, this younger generation already has Federal Bureau Investigation Director J. Edgar Hoover handing out warnings about juvenile delinquency and United States Attorney General Tom C. Clark sounding an alarm about the great upsurge in teen-age criminality and proposing a new system for handling juvenile law violators.

Analyzing an estimated 1,393,644 major crimes committed during the year 1944, crime-expert Hoover recently was almost jolted out of his swivel chair. The figures proved that a part of the youth of America is on its way to the dogs on a greased slide.

"A comparison of the arrest records for 1944 with the last peacetime year of 1941 shows that arrests for boys under 18 years of age increased 18.8 per cent, while arrests for girls in the same age bracket jumped 117.8 per cent," Hoover explains.

"If these youngsters continue along the path of degradation as they reach maturity, it is not difficult to imagine the colossal task which will confront society and the police. It is unfortunate that the crimes for which these youngsters are arrested do not fall into the class of mischievousness. Last year, 40.1 per cent of all persons arrested for robbery, burglary, larceny, auto theft, embezzlement, fraud, forgery, counterfeiting, receiving stolen property and arson were under 21 years of age."

Hoover, U.S. Atty. Gen. Clark, and Federal agencies with responsibility in the field of juvenile delinquency, gasped their loudest when they got down to examining the figures on teen-age girls. They compared the 1944 figures with the year 1939 and found a 174 per cent increase in arrests for drunkenness and driving while intoxicated and the astounding increase in crime waves in history. From the teen-age girls arrested for drunkenness and vagrancy will come the future gun molls, the newer models of cigar-smoking Bonnie Parker, running mate, of Clyde Barrow, and of the Lady in Red, outlaw doll of the mad John Dillinger.

AND from the lads under 18 arrested for rape and robbery, larceny and auto theft will come the future Dutch Schultz, Alvin Karpises and Al Capones.

"The big gangsters of the period after the last war were not war veterans," Hoover said. "And the gangsters of the next generation will be drawn from our own present day juvenile delinquents rather than from the returning war veterans. It happened that way once before when John Dillinger, Alvin Karpis, Fred and Arthur Barker, Pretty Boy Floyd and a score of other hoodlums of the late twenties and early thirties, all too young to serve during the first World War, grew into maturity and caused a crime wave, the like of which was never previously experienced in the United States."

Figures for the present year available at the F.B.I. here in Washington would seem to indicate that the Hoover-predicted crime wave, if not off to a good start, is at least festering in a good culture. The first nine months of this year showed a crime increase of 10.8 per cent over 1944 when law enforcement agencies faced a new and serious crime every 23 seconds. The semi-annual bulletin of Uniform Crime Reports, compiled by the F.B.I., reveals that approximately 70 per cent of all adult criminals were juvenile delinquents; that 58,041 persons arrested and fingerprinted during the first six months of this year were under 21 years of age; that 13,133 of these were boys and girls in the 17-year age group and that the greatest in-second automobile was abandoned. One day later the boys stole another automobile and again met their young girl friend whom they took for another ride.

"The trio was found sleeping in a car by members of a local police department early in the morning. Upon questioning, the 6-year-old lad readily admitted the theft of approximately 16 automobiles. He said he was uncertain of the exact number, but knew that those he had stolen had been taken within two months. He had been accompanied in most of these crimes by his 14-year-old boy friend and their girl. Both boys were sentenced to serve indeterminate terms, the older one at a state correctional institution and the younger in a state training school. The girl was placed on indefinite probation in the custody of relatives."

In the files of the F.B.I. are plenty of records to prove that here are many juvenile delinquents growing up with the warped ideas it takes to make the gangsters of the future. To prove his contention that the breeding stock of potential postwar criminals is not among our boys who fought this war, but in the ranks of the tender teen-agers, Hoover cites the case of a 16-year-old boy who went into a small liquor store in an eastern city and ordered a pint of whisky.

Upon being required to show a Selective Service card, this youth pulled out a .32 caliber revolver and ordered the proprietor to place the contents of the cash register in a paper bag and hand over the counter," Hoover said. The youth then hurriedly left the store, taking with him $84 in cash. About an hour later the proprietor entered a tailor shop with intentions of robbing it, but at that time the proprietor did not see the youth and caused the young gunman to flee. As he left, however, the boy fired a shot from the weapon he carried.

"Continuing his round of hold-ups, this same boy attempted another robbery the following morning when, wearing a handkerchief about his face, he entered a local saloon. This hold-up was also thwarted when a customer threw an empty beer glass at the young bandit. He fired again, but his aim, fortunately, was bad. Within a very short while this same youth carried out a fourth hold-up attempt. This one succeeded to the extent of $5.

"A thorough investigation revealed his identity and as a result he was brought to trial and charged with robbery, grand larceny and carrying firearms. He was sentenced to serve a total of 20 to 40 years in prison."

ALSO in the records of the F.B.I. are cases of juvenile gangs operating on a large scale in various parts of the country. In one Southern city, the F.B.I. found a very "select" gang, composed of boys and girls all under the age of 18. All had passed very difficult "entrance requirements" to the gang. The entrance standards for this particular gang required that each boy must have successfully executed one robbery, or one act of destruction of property, or one case of rape.

Girl members were required to qualify by an act of vagrancy or a sex offense. The gang was broken up when one boy killed another in an argument over a 16-year-old girl member of the juvenile mob.

The nation's foremost authority on crime detection and prevention, Hoover lays the blame for the present alarming increase in teenage immorality and criminality directly in the laps of the parents of America. He scores untrained, indifferent and neglectful parents;

points to immorality among grown-ups and the passing of the good old American home; bemoans lax home discipline and failure to treat properly cases of maladjustment.

HE also points to unwholesome employment of juveniles, burlesque shows and salacious literature; understaffed juvenile courts and neglected detention homes. He blames the housing shortage and poorly trained personnel in community governments.

"We've got to remember that the kids of today are a lot smarter than 20 years ago," he said, recalling the comparative pink-tea scare thrown into the nation by the juveniles of the first Jazz Age. "And remember that any kid can go out today and make more money than his father made 20 years ago.

"They're not conditioned for this prosperity. They've learned to buy their entertainment but not how to keep up with their expenses. Honky tonks flourish as never before and the first thing you know a kid's appetite for entertainment has outgrown his earning power and he sticks up a store to keep money in his pants pocket."

To combat juvenile delinquency and save this country from an unparalleled crime wave, Hoover suggests:

That the parents of America learn the meaning of home discipline.

Training for parents.

Creation of separate juvenile bureaus in police departments.

Appropriate religious training and assistance in churches.

Adequate sex supervision in institutions for boys and girls.

Supervised recreation in schools after school hours.

Closer relationship between teachers and parents.

And to those who accuse him of yelling "wail" and screaming too loudly about a generation that is only suffering growing pains instead of going headlong to the dogs, he points to these concrete facts: Last year 34.5 per cent of all robberies were committed by boys and girls under 21; 51.8 per cent of all burglaries were committed by boys and girls too young to vote; and 63.1 per cent of all automobile thefts in the United States were committed by kids of an age who should be legally liable to a spanking.

"Unless," says crime expert Hoover, "we want a wave of murders, bank robberies, rape, arson, kidnappings and thefts, we'd better get busy."

It looks like the today's teen-agers are about to make pikers out of their predecessors of that other postwar era. Today they're not out for being merely wild and woolly; they're out to substitute murder for mere hell-raising and vagrancy and prostitution for the comparative harmless necking that went on in the rumble seats of roadsters in the era of bathtub gin.

They ride straight up and down slightly aft of the horse's middle, and bounce a foot at every stride. The result of this odd procedure, he said, was that some plugs reached the finish line so sway-backed the jockey's feet were dragging.

MOST OF THE RACES were five furlongs, which Don considered good judgment, inasmuch as he thought most of the beasts couldn't have made it another foot.

Don's horse won and paid 37 yen, which he later discovered is about as long a price as you can get in a Korean race.

The payoff line moves slowly because the cashiers pay one ticket at a time from stacks of little platters, each one containing the exact winning price.

George Hall of the St. Louis Post Dispatch called by reference from the Director's Office. He has a communication from his Managing Editor, Ben Reese, who referred to Walter Winchell's column recently wherein Winchell commented on the Director's 51st birthday and the powerful forces that are worrying him. Reese wanted to know two questions: first of all, whether the Director could make any comment on the Winchell statement, to which I replied there was no comment; and secondly, whether the Director would keep them in mind if he did issue a statement or the like. I told him we would be glad to do this.

Respectfully,
